

all day, I got there between nine and ten, and everything was unusually quiet. During my frequent visits to the polls, some eight or ten times during the day, I did not see but one difficulty, and that was between two drunken men of the American party, and I separated them.

Q. Did you see anybody intimidating or attempting to force others from the polls?

A. I did not.

Q. Did you see any unusual amount of violence?

A. None. It was unusually quiet. I saw no fighting. Compared with previous elections, I think it was the quietest one we ever had. The polls are not more than half a square from my dwelling, and the quietness of the election was a general subject of remark in the neighborhood.

By Mr. Gordon—Q. Were you at any of the other polls during the day?

A. I was at the eleventh ward polls between four and five o'clock, and when I visited the polls, I saw some 200 or 300 persons there, principally Reformers.

Mr. Freaner having called over the list of witnesses handed to him, examined all those who were present, after which, the Committee adjourned, to meet again so soon as additional witnesses were forthcoming.
