PREFACE

This dissertation, a study of Maryland imprints for the years 1864-66, is part of a vast research project of the American Imprints Inventory to make a complete national bibliography, as far as possible, of every known American imprint issued before 1876. The American Imprints Inventory survey slips are on file in the National Union Catalog Division of the Library of Congress. The data on the survey slips were gathered by the WPA Writers' Project workers during the late thirties. Under this project were recorded information of all known imprints found in libraries throughout the United States, in catalogs and other bibliographic tools.

After securing the survey slips which pertained to the area and years of assigned study, the following procedures were undertaken to check, verify and assemble the data found: search of the National Union Catalog and public catalogs of the Library of Congress, Sabin's Bibliotheca Americana, Kelly's American Catalogue of Books, and examination of some of the imprints themselves. Since less than half the titles required further verification after the above procedures were conducted, letters of inquiry were sent to holding libraries and visits made of institutions in Baltimore.

An effort was made to check each imprint with at least one library but this proved an impossible task since some libraries reported their copy inaccessible, disposed of, misplaced or lost. Somewhat the same situation prevailed in various libraries visited in the Baltimore area.

The principal section of this study consists of the bibliography of Maryland imprints, 1864-1866, which is arranged chronologically and alphabetically by author or by title where there is no author. Symbols as to the location of imprints are given. The symbols are those used by the Library of Congress. A list of newspapers published in Maryland during this period is also included. Charts analyzing the types of material published and the output of individual publishers and printers, as well as an author-title-subject index form the last portion of this work.

I wish to express my gratitude to Miss May Gardner of the National Union Catalog Division of the Library of Congress for her invaluable advice and generous assistance. Special appreciation is extended to the staff and officials of the Maryland Historical Society, the Peabody Institute, Enoch Pratt Free Library, Loyola College in Baltimore, and the countless persons who have rendered kind assistance in the compilation of this study.

CHAPTER I

MARYLAND FROM 1864 THROUGH 1866

In Maryland during the Civil War as in other border states, partisan spirit ran high, as witness the Baltimore riot on April 19, 1861, when the Sixth Massachusetts Volunteers detrained there in the opening days of the conflict. Despite Maryland's geographic proximity to the two capitals, Washington and Richmond, she was left relatively little scarred by the ravages of battle. The invasion of the state in 1862 by the Confederates resulting in the bloody conflict at Antietam and the second invasion in the summer of 1863 as a prelude to Gettysburg were the only conflicts on Maryland soil prior to 1864.

The third invasion of Maryland in the summer of 1864 was brought about by Union General David Hunter's depredations in northern Virginia. To retaliate and deter these actions, Lee sent General Jubal A. Early with a force of approximately 14,000 up the Shenandoah Valley to threaten Washington. Early crossed the Potomac on July 4, 1864. The Confederate columns went over South Mountain on the eighth and the next day, brushing aside a Federal force under Major General Lew Wallace of the Middle Department, they crossed the Monocacy River. After two dusty days of marching thirty miles a day, the rebels on July 11 approached lightly-defended Fort Stevens at Washington's western outskirts in sight of Soldiers' Home. Even as Early scouted the position, the Federal defenses were hastily reinforced. Convinced that he had not the strength to capture Washington and fearing the depressing effect of a defeat at the gates of the capital on Southern morale, Early withdrew after several skirmishes to Virginia.<sup>1</sup>

During this raid the city of Frederick was obliged to pay a ransom of $200,000 to save itself from destruction and a similar levy of $20,000 and goods was extracted from the citizens of Hagerstown.<sup>2</sup> Confederate cavalry rode in all directions, burning bridges, cutting telegraph lines, disrupting railroads, and capturing horses. Under Early was Brigadier General Bradley T. Johnson, a Marylander himself, who had several Maryland units in his cavalry command: the First Maryland Cavalry, the Baltimore Light Artillery (Lieutenant Colonel Harry Gilmore), and the Second Maryland Battalion of Cavalry.<sup>3</sup> It was the Baltimore Light Artillery which, at the time Early was threatening Washington, came within five miles of Baltimore to Charles Street Avenue and burned the country home of Governor Bradford. The house of Post-Master Montgomery Blair at Silver Spring was also burned. Towson, Reistertown, Mount Washington, and the Relay were visited by these raiders but no extensive damage was done. Nor did Marylanders rally to the support of Early's expedition as had been hoped. However, as a result of the raid, Baltimore for a time was cut off from all communication with the rest of the country except by water.<sup>4</sup> This ended the fighting on Maryland soil for the balance of the war.

Maryland had been kept in the Union by the strong repressive measures exerted on the citizens' rights by the state government which was sympathetic to the Union and which acted in concert with the occupying Federal military authorities. Ill feeling between the two factions did not end with the war. Repressive measures were continued by General Lew Wallace even after Lee's surrender. Baltimore churches founded by Southern sympathizers when they withdrew from the Methodist Church were closed, Confederate soldiers were threatened with arrest if they returned to their Maryland homes, the oath of allegiance was required of citizens of Prince George's, Charles' and St. Mary's Counties before they were allowed to engage in a trade or profession, a garrison of 5,000 troops was maintained there, and military control was exercised in the state until January, 1866.<sup>5</sup>

The situation was no doubt aggravated by the fact that Lincoln's assassin, John Wilkes Booth, was a Marylander, born in Harford County in 1839, and that he found sympathy in his own state.<sup>6</sup>

A more commendable expression of sympathy to the defeated Confederacy was demonstrated by the ladies of Baltimore who organized a Southern relief society and in 1866 realized a considerable sum of money through a fair. Their efforts prompted the generous gift of George Peabody, a former Baltimore resident then living in London, to support education in the southern states. Other states and counties joined in the good work.<sup>7</sup>

Another important event during the years 1864-1866 was the calling of the Constitutional Convention of 1864. One of the consequences of the national conflict was the breakdown of political rectitude. In the election of November, 1861 held for members of the legislature, every device was used by those in power to secure the victory of their own partisans. Soldiers were stationed at the polls; many citizens were arbitrarily disfranchised, others arrested; and a test-oath--a thing unheard of in the state--was administered. By such means the desired majority was obtained. The Maryland Legislature of 1864 was elected by the same methods.<sup>8</sup>

Therefore, the success of the government party in the election for legislature for 1864 ensured the calling of a convention to remodel the Constitution of the State enacted in 1851, with the view of abolishing slavery within her borders.<sup>9</sup>

To be certain of a majority ballot favorable to the calling of this convention, a set of questions was submitted to every voter, so devised that only a thorough partisan could answer them satisfactorily. And if this was not sufficient, a voter's ballot could be rejected even if his answers were satisfactory, if the judges believed him to be disloyal.<sup>10</sup> In Baltimore, out of a voting population of about 40,000, eighty-seven votes were casted against the constitutional convention, compared with 9,189 in favor.<sup>11</sup> The Convention met on April 27, 1864 at Annapolis, Henry H. Goldsborough being chosen President. Of the ninety-eight members approved by 12,000 votes, sixty-eight were emancipationists.<sup>12</sup>

Some acts the Convention set forth to accomplish were unauthorized and the very assembly which had approved of the calling of a convention declared opposition to some of its proposals. A minority protest was issued, and such noted lawyers and unconditional unionists as Reverdy Johnson, William Schley, and Thomas S. Alexander declared that the procedure was a travesty on law and justice. The following were some of the provisions the Convention enacted: a registration of voters was provided for; the principle of representation according to population was adopted; the power of appointing magistrates was restored to the governor; and a State board of education was created, consisting of the governor, the lieutenant-governor, the speaker of the House of Delegates, and the State superintendent of education.<sup>13</sup> Two articles in the State Constitution reflecting the times in which the Convention assembled were the fifth and the twenty-fourth. The former declared that citizens of the State owed "paramount allegiance to the constitution and government of the United States" and the latter provided there should be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude except in conviction for punishment of crime and all slaves were hereby declared free.<sup>14</sup>

Since the State Constitution virtually disfranchised nearly two-thirds of the citizens in Maryland, it soon proved so unsatisfactory that another one was adopted three years later in 1867.

The city of Baltimore, the largest and most prosperous in the State of Maryland, was important in a second sense: it is the senior see of the Catholic Church in the United States. The see was established as a diocese in 1789 and raised to an archdiocese in 1808. Its early years were the starting point from which missionaries went forth to evangelize a growing young country.

Under date of July 8, 1863, is found the following entry in the journal of Martin John Spalding:

The greatest, the best, and the most learned of our prelates was found dead in his bed this morning. The venerable Dr. Kendrick is no more in this world, but is doubtless in heaven praying for us.<sup>15</sup>

The author of the diary was at that time Bishop of Louisville, Kentucky. A year later on July 31, 1864, he was installed as

Dr. Kendrick's successor, the seventh archbishop of Baltimore. Archbishop Spalding's record as Bishop of Louisville had given proof of his administrative ability and his record as a writer and leader made him a natural choice for this most honorary position in the American church. The appointment, as Father Coskery (administrator of Baltimore, sede vacante) noted in his letter of welcome, was quite satisfactory to both clergy and faithful of the Maryland see.<sup>16</sup>

The new Archbishop set himself to work on several projects. He had found the cathedral incomplete. During his first year he finished and decorated it by the summer of 1865. He used a gift of $15,000 from a most generous Catholic gentleman of Baltimore to enlarge the archiepiscopal residence to accommodate his priests when they visited the city. He founded a convent of the Good Shepherd in Baltimore, staffed by sisters from the motherhouse in Louisville, on a site donated by Emily McTavish.<sup>17</sup> Another generous gift, from the same lady, of one hundred acres of land lying on Frederick Road within a short distance of the city was designated as the site of St. Mary's Industrial School for Boys. This edifice, long a familiar landmark to Baltimoreans for nearly a century, was a pioneering step to solving the problem of juvenile delinquency and early "drop-outs" from school. The school, incorporated April 9, 1866, was staffed by the Xaverian Brothers whom Archbishop Spalding had brought from Belgium for this purpose. The first boy was admitted on October 3, 1866.<sup>18</sup>

In the war winter of 1864-65, the diocese of Charleston fell upon dark days. Its bishop was in Europe, unable to return home because of the blockade of southern ports, the vicar general died, other priests had fallen victims to disease and hard labor until only one priest was left in the beleaguered city. The Holy See temporarily entrusted Charleston to Archbishop Spalding who appointed the surviving priest vicar general and sent other priests to help him, for whom he obtained passes from the Union Government. During this period, the Baltimore archbishop's appeal to his people in a circular for funds for the impoverished people of the South raised $10,000, which was distributed without distinction of faith.

The occasion of Lincoln's assassination was marked by the Archbishop with a circular letter to the archdiocese in which he expressed his detestation of the atrocious deed and called upon all Catholics to unite with their fellow citizens in expressing their sympathy for the nation's loss.

Archbishop Spalding was not unconcerned about the spiritual welfare of his archdiocese. As soon as the press of urgent business permitted, he began the visitation of his parishes, preaching and administering the sacrament of confirmation to about 8,000 persons, of whom 850 were converts. He encouraged missions to be preached in the principal parishes for the fifth Jubilee proclaimed by Pius IX. During this first visitation he took measures to have no less than twenty new churches built. He himself preached the retreat to his priests in the spring of 1865 and followed it with a diocesan synod, the sixth of Baltimore. The synod sought principally to foster vocations to the priesthood, devotion to the saints, parish associations, and required pastors to preach on the matrimonial legislation of the church.

The most significant event in the history of the Baltimore archdiocese and indeed in the whole American church during the years of this study was the holding of the Second Plenary Council of Baltimore, October 7-21, 1866. It was to have been held in 1862 but was postponed because of the Civil War. The purpose of the Council was fourfold: (1) at the close of the national crisis which had divided the nation, to demonstrate the band of unity which knits American Catholics, (2) to devise ways for meeting the new conditions resulting from the war, (3) to render ecclesiastical discipline uniform throughout the United States, and (4) to discuss the future status of the four million freed negroes.<sup>19</sup>

When the day of assembly came after much preparation, there gathered at the Baltimore cathedral for the inaugural process seven archbishops (representing the provinces of Baltimore, Cincinnati, New Orleans, New York, St. Louis, San Francisco, and Oregon), and some thirty-eight bishops, three mitred abbots, and well over 120 theologians and heads of religious communities.<sup>20</sup> At the opening session in the cathedral Sunday, October 7, Archbishop McCloskey of New York presided; on the second Sunday, Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati; and at the closing Sunday, October 21, Archbishop Odin of St. Louis.<sup>21</sup>

The deliberative sessions of the Council were presided over by Archbishop Spalding, who was also the Papal Delegate. The bishops sat in the sanctuary and the attending clergy in the nave of the church. To facilitate freedom of expression, anyone choosing to speak could do so either in Latin or English. The procession of mitred prelates at the inauguration was matched by the closing ceremonies on October 21, at which President Andrew Johnson assisted. An estimated crowd of 40,000 persons watched the procession and the proceedings were reported favorably by the great American dailies.<sup>22</sup>

It is not the purpose here to report the deliberations of the Council. One item deserves mention. It had been Archbishop's hope that a result of the Council might be the founding of a national Catholic university. The subject was discussed and the Fathers of the Council expressed a desire for such an institution of higher learning, but were content to confine their practical conclusions on higher education to devising means to endow the American college in Rome.<sup>23</sup>

John Lancaster Spalding ends his account of the Council in these words:

The fathers of the Second Plenary Council found that the rapid growth of the church justified them in petitioning the Holy See to erect fifteen new dioceses and vicariates apostolic in the United States. The decrees were sent to Rome, where they were submitted to the most thorough examination, and a few slight corrections, partly verbal ... having been made, they received the solemn sanction of the Holy Father, and became the ecclesiastical law of the United States.<sup>24</sup>

It is hoped that the few highlights of the history of Maryland during the years 1864-66 will serve to focus the setting which prompted the authorship of individual imprints and led to their publication. The problems that confronted the state in her struggle of internal strife during the last years of the Civil War, the issues foremost in the minds of politicians and prominent citizens, and the moral, educational and cultural interests of her people are mirrored in the contents of this bibliography.

CHAPTER II

PRINTERS AND PRINTING IN MARYLAND FROM 1864 THROUGH 1866

The first printing in Maryland was done at St. Mary's by William Nuthead, who previously had attempted to establish a press at Jamestown in 1682. An absolute prohibition of printing of any kind in the Dominion by the government forced him to leave and to settle in the more liberal province of Maryland.<sup>1</sup> Before the discovery in the Land Office at Annapolis of inconspicuous printed blank forms, giving credence that Nuthead was printing such items as early as August, 1685, it was thought the first printing in the province occurred in the year 1689. His widow, Dinah Nuthead, although illiterate, carried on the business and became the first printer in Annapolis, the new capital, where she moved soon after her husband's death.<sup>2</sup>

Maryland's next printer was Thomas Reading, at Annapolis, who began work there in 1700 and continued for thirteen years until his death.<sup>3</sup> William Parks in 1727, issued at Annapolis the short-lived Maryland Gazette, the first paper published in the province and south of Philadelphia, and the seventh to maintain regular publication in English-speaking America. Two years later, there followed a paper of the same name, which was published by Jonas Green, Maryland's only printer for a quarter of a century. Up to 1773, this was the only paper published in Maryland, and, with the Philadelphia journals, was the sole medium of information for Baltimoreans.<sup>4</sup>

After Green's death, Annapolis declined as a printing center and the industry developed rapidly in the newer city of Baltimore. The new town's first printer came in 1765, a German named Nicholas Hasselbach. His press and equipment were later sold to William Goddard, who began publication of the first Baltimore newspaper, the Maryland Journal and the Baltimore Advertiser, on August 20, 1773.<sup>5</sup>

Baltimore's first daily paper, the Baltimore Daily Repository, was issued on Monday, October 24, 1791, by David Graham. It was re-named the Baltimore Daily Intelligencer in 1793 when Graham's partners assumed ownership upon his retirement.<sup>6</sup>

Inventions of the Fourdrinier machine, the power press, and the rotary press in the first half of the 19th century speeded up the production of printing and reduced its cost. Many a large and small printing establishment sprang into existence throughout the eastern coast.

The war years 1861-65 heightened activity in the newspaper media, the major form of communication existing then except by word of mouth. Accounts of battles, casualty lists, editorial criticisms on the conduct of the war and issues of political import enlivened the front pages. It is a truism that newspapers come to life during a national conflict and enjoy booming business, but it is not all a rosy picture, considering the high cost of paper and labor and heavy taxes, as well as hampering restrictions on their freedom. Mott made this observation:

Probably no great war has ever been so thoroughly covered by eye-witness correspondents as the American Civil War. Newspapers have printed far greater volumes of material about later wars, and more prompt and accurate news; but the Civil War conditions allowed for more uncensored, on-the-scene reporting than did those of later wars.<sup>7</sup>

More than 150 war correspondents served Northern papers during the war, reporting on-the-spot and being liable to attack by the enemy as enlisted men. They were sometimes assigned to officers' staffs and served as aides, dispatch couriers, or signal officers.<sup>8</sup> These correspondents were called "specials" for short, and represented individual papers. Ineffective censorship of their reports led to disclosures of valuable military information to the enemy. On the other hand, papers of the South seldom betrayed troop movements in such a way as to give aid to the Northern side. Papers in this section received their war news through an official press association which the Confederacy used to control what appeared in the newspapers.<sup>9</sup>

The Baltimore Sun, as the march of time would show, outlasted its six competitors, flourishing from the day its first issue went to press on May 17, 1837. Its first years of existence as a penny paper were, indeed, uncommon in a day when a newspaper served a particular cause or espoused the belief of a political figure. It ran with the policy of slanting news of local interest in language intelligible for the common people of Baltimore, the working class which could afford only a small price of a paper and to which abiding political and moral issues of the day were beyond its comprehension or care.

The Sun was one of four newspapers that broke with tradition and set up this new theory that a newspaper's first duty is to its readers, with the necessary implication that its most important function is to supply them with accurate and adequate information. The other three were the New York Sun, the New York Herald, and the Philadelphia Public Ledger.<sup>10</sup> The founder of the Baltimore Sun, Arunah Shepherdson Abell, believed that to be publisher of a great newspaper was a career enough for any man and he aspired to no greater ambition than to this ideal.

Abell's sympathies were with the Southern cause, but his paper maintained editorial silence and printed trivial news as if the war had been an incidental event. At one time an order for the closing of the Sun and the arrest of its owner was issued by the War Department, but never enforced. This action was probably instigated by politicians in opposition to the owner, who presently offered to buy the paper on the supposition Abell was in a precarious position and wanted to be rid of his property.<sup>11</sup>

Prices rose as the war continued, paper and ink became harder to obtain, and transportation difficulties clogged Baltimore, so that in 1864 the Sun was forced to raise its price to two cents.<sup>12</sup>

Likewise in that year, Charles C. Fulton became the sole proprietor of the Baltimore American, when the son of his late co-partner, as administrator, sold his half share to him. Continuing to espouse Republican principles, the paper's straightforward and consistent political activity won the esteem of the people.

Reprisals by the military and civilian authority under its jurisdiction for expressions of Southern sympathy in the press continued until the final months of the war. In the waning months of 1864, the Evening Post was suppressed for publication of articles offensive to loyal citizens and the Evening Loyalist was suppressed by order of General Wallace.<sup>13</sup> A series of seizures and arrests occurred the previous year. Among those suppressed and their publishers and editors taken into custody were the Baltimore Republican, the Baltimore Daily Gazette, and the Evening Transcript. On the day the first two newspapers were closed, Michael Kelly and John B. Piet, of the book publishing house of Messrs. Kelly, Hadian & Piet, were arrested by government detectives on the charge of selling a work entitled Fourteen Months in the Bastiles of America, by Francis Key Howard, of the Baltimore bar.<sup>14</sup>

Small crowds gathered at several newspaper buildings on Saturday morning of the 15th of April, to await further news of the tragic assassination of Abraham Lincoln. The city in gay and colorful celebration of the cessation of hostility the day before was suddenly transformed into mourning silence. The Sun, American, Clipper, Gazette, German Correspondent, Wecker, and Sunday Telegram newspapers had their buildings draped in sombre habiliments.<sup>15</sup>

Of the publishing and printing concerns in existence during the period 1864-1866, the most prolific in the number of works represented in this check list was the firm of John Murphy and Company.<sup>16</sup> After an apprenticeship in the printing trade in Philadelphia, John Murphy established a printing and stationery house in Baltimore about the year 1835 which was located at No. 182 Baltimore Street. The building was "an elegant and commodious marble structure, five stories high, with a finished dry basement, running the entire depth of the lot." Sales and business were conducted on the first floor; display of foreign publications occupied the second; a storeroom of printing supplies was on the third; printing was done on the fourth; and the bindery took up the last floor.<sup>17</sup>

As a publishing house of high standards and laudable ideas, Murphy and Company did a substantial general business, although its specialty was Catholic books. Murphy courageously undertook the publishing of ponderous theological works for which there was a limited market, and many a Catholic writer with his manuscripts refused by secular publishing firms would have had no outlet for publication if Murphy and Company had not provided one. Losses from these ventures were subsidized by profits from commercial printing and the sale of textbooks. He also printed devotional literature, selling it at a low price, and made translations of foreign Catholic publications available to the American public.

Murphy also raised the standard of law publications. He published the new constitutions of Maryland of 1851, 1864, and 1867, as well as the Maryland Code and its supplements. This latter enterprise won the commendation of Chief Justice Roger Brooke Taney. He received a Papal Medal of Merit in 1855 for the publication of the Definition of the Dogma of the Immaculate Conception; for his Acts and Decrees of the Second Plenary Council of Baltimore, Murphy was honored with the title of "typographer to the Apostolic See" in 1866.<sup>18</sup>

John W. Woods, book and job printer, opened his establishment in 1837 which was described as "being well-fitted up with all kinds of printing material, with gas power, and a large and varied assortment of modern styles of types."<sup>19</sup> Also attributed to him were the characteristics of neatness and beauty in small printing job and card work. The firm's Baltimore City Directory was printed and published with unique accuracy which required great skill and practical ability.

The arrangement of the Lucas Bros. type and stereotype foundry enabled it to furnish printers with every article necessary for a complete printing office, from black and fancy inks to power, card and hand presses. The establishment was equipped with the best machinery for the production of type and in the casting department were fifteen moulding machines, each capable of casting 150 type characters per minute.<sup>20</sup>

Schneidereith & Sons, which celebrated its centennial in 1949 and at present deals primarily in direct-mail advertising, first came into existence when Carl W. Schneidereith, a book and job printer, hung out his shingle at No. 19 Mercer Street, Baltimore. A native of Elbing in the Kingdom of Prussia, he left at the age of nineteen to serve his "journeyman" printing apprenticeship in Leipzig; from there he worked his way through Belgium, Holland and England before landing in the new world. The short-lived Baltimore Herald, a small weekly newspaper and one of his earliest ventures with the collaboration of Theodore Kroh, was followed by a controversial daily, the Baltimore Wecker. The sympathies of its editor, Dr. Karl H. Schnauffer, lay with the abolitionists. A considerable business in foreign literature printing, especially German and Hebrew, occupied the Schneidereith firm in addition to a great variety of general commercial printing. Numbered among its customers was Sharp & Dohme, then emerging as one of the largest of the country's manufacturing chemists and user of millions of labels and direction wrappers in many languages.<sup>21</sup>

A greater part of the printing, in summary, was done in Baltimore, while legal work seemed to have been concentrated in Annapolis where five publishers or printers represented in the check list flourished. Despite rising cost and unsettled conditions of the reconstruction period after the war, publishing in Maryland seemed to have thrived as never before.
