

THE LYING OF HOWARD COOPER.—The conviction and sentence to death of Howard Cooper was for one of the most flagrant outrages to be found in the criminal annals of Maryland. Although there was no question of his guilt, he was allowed the exercise of every right that our laws concede to offenders. He was permitted to transfer his case for trial from before what might have been regarded by some as a prejudiced jury in Baltimore county to a jury in Baltimore city altogether uninfluenced by any such excitement as might have warped the judgment of a jury of the vicinage. Counsel were assigned him by the court, and on the clear testimony of his victim, which it would have been easy to supplement with his own confession of the crime, he was tried, convicted and sentenced to death. No more righteous verdict was ever rendered. Nevertheless, the right of Cooper's counsel to take the case to the Court of Appeals on two points ruled against them in the lower court admitted of no dispute, and there was a quiet acquiescence in their course. The law allowed it, and the people, as they are accustomed to do in this State, submitted obediently to the law. But when the rulings of the lower court were approved by the Court of Appeals and Cooper's counsel intimated their purpose to take the case up to the Supreme Court of the United States upon the same points that had been passed upon by the Court of Appeals, popular feeling in the county resented the delay that would thus be interposed, and the more strongly because the only result of the action of the Supreme Court, if adverse to the decision of our own courts, would have been to have sent the case back to the courts to be tried over again. It was felt that in so clear a case of guilt the law ought to be allowed to take its course without obstruction, and that the technical points to be passed on by the Supreme Court, which might be tested just as well in any case of less importance, would delay indefinitely the execution of the sentence or would end, as such delays have often done before, in a miscarriage of justice. It is this frequent miscarriage of justice in criminal cases that has incited combinations of people all over the United States to take the law into their own hands to such an extent that as we pointed out two weeks ago, of 3,377 murders perpetrated during the year 1884, the total number of murderers executed was but 312, and of this number 210 met their death by lynch law and only 103 by legal process. The leniency of the law, the opportunities it gives by resorting to appeals, to delay proceedings, the reluctance of juries to bring in a verdict carrying the death penalty, the timidity of some and the sentimentalism or corruption of others—all these things tend, singly or together, to weaken popular confidence in the administration of the law, and to encourage the commission of crimes which the laws were enacted to punish. If Howard Cooper had been caught while his pursuers were hunting for him he would have been hanged out of hand; but when his arrest was quietly made and the machinery of the law put in force against him, they were content to let the law do the work which they had previously determined to do outside of the law. They felt that such a deed done in their midst was a standing menace to the purity of their households, and that unless promptly punished no mother of a family would be secure in her home while the men were absent, nor any young girl safe of her person, even in going to a neighbor's, unless attended by a companion or a guard. It was the enormity of the crime that carried with it the necessity for swift protection against its recurrence, and if the law had been allowed to take its course, no such dreadful scene would have happened as that which occurred at Towson town a little before one o'clock yesterday morning, when a resolute body of masked men broke open the doors of the jail and of the cell in which Cooper was confined and took him, with a rope about his neck, to the nearest tree and hanged him. It was quietly, deliberately and determinedly done as by men who had a duty to perform, and who would not be deterred by any fear of consequences from performing it. It was a lawless act, but when the terror inspired among widely-scattered homesteads by Cooper's crime, with all the cruel circumstances attending it, are taken into consideration, and when the fear grew that by the proceedings taken by his counsel he might yet escape punishment notwithstanding his openly acknowledged guilt, it is not difficult to understand how it was that men usually so orderly and so law-abiding as those of Baltimore county should take upon themselves to execute that sentence which the law had pronounced, but from which they feared the criminal might ultimately escape. THE STATE attempts no justification of the act; for the consequences of such violent deeds often strike deeper than is intended, and serve to encourage a blind resort to lynch law in cases where it could be far less easily vindicated, and thus one wrong which might be palliated would breed another that could not. An effort has been made to attribute to race prejudice the feeling that has been excited against Howard Cooper. It was the horrible nature of the crime, and not the man or the race from which he sprung, that turned people's thoughts against him. If the crime had been perpetrated by a white man, the story as told by the victim of it would have moved all hearts quite as much, would have caused as relentless a pursuit of the criminal, and would have determined his fate as surely as it has determined that of Cooper. It is the one crime in the avenging of which all men are of accord, and where they make no distinction between race or color or previous condition. The pity is that the law is not always permitted to take its proper course.

UNFOUNDED RUMORS—The story of the three black crows is well illustrated by the unfounded reports which were circulated yesterday as to an alleged accident to a Baltimore excursion steamer. The rumors were of the most startling character, one of the mildest of them representing that a steamer, with 600 excursionists on board, had exploded her boiler and sunk. When this report was proved to be false with respect to one steamer, it was applied to another with variations. It ought not to be necessary to say that such reports should not be lightly put in circulation. Apart from the shock and anxiety which they cause to thousands of persons who have friends and relatives on these excursions, they injure causelessly the steamboat companies which are engaged in ministering to the enjoyment and pleasure of the community. These companies have spent much money and shown great energy in the effort to provide for a want which cannot be supplied to the great majority of people in any other way, and reports which may make confidence in them

MAIN OFFICE, BANKERS AND MERCHANTS' TEL. CO.
 BALTIMORE, July 13, 1885.
TO THE PUBLIC:

On account of the recent action of the Western Union Telegraph Company in New York, and in this city, a number of the wires of this Company on the pole of the American Rapid Telegraph Company, as well as every wire of that company heretofore worked by the Bankers and Merchants' Telegraph Company, have been cut and rendered useless for the present. I am pleased to call attention to the fact that ample arrangements have been made for the prompt transmission of all business to points heretofore reached by the Bankers and Merchants' and Rapid Telegraph Companies, and that we are now able to forward telegrams without delay. We have the kind and cordial co-operation of the POSTAL TELEGRAPH AND CABLE COMPANY and of the BALTIMORE AND OHIO TELEGRAPH COMPANY, who have generously placed their wires at our command.

Attention is called to the following letter:
BALTIMORE AND OHIO TELEGRAPH DEPT., SUPERINTENDENT'S OFFICE.
