

NEGRO WINS STATE COURT STUDY TEST

Tribunal Rules U. Of M. Nursing School Must Admit Girl

Text of decision by State Court of Appeals Page 16

Annapolis, April 14 (Special)—The Court of Appeals ruled today that a Negro girl must be admitted to the University of Maryland School of Nursing.

In the first test of discrimination in educational facilities to be passed on by the State's highest tribunal since 1936, the court ruled in accordance with two Supreme Court decisions requiring:

1. Provision of equal educational facilities within a State.
2. Provision of such facilities for Negro applicants "as soon" as they are provided for white applicants.

The direct issue of the constitutionality of segregation has been raised in cases now before the Supreme Court.

Affects Six Other Cases

The Court of Appeals action is expected to influence decisions in six other cases pending in the lower court in which Negroes have asked admission to the Schools of Dentistry and Pharmacy in Baltimore and the Colleges of Engineering and Home Economics at College Park, although other issues have been raised in these cases.

Today's decision reversed a ruling of Chief Judge W. Conwell Smith in Baltimore city court dismissing mandamus proceedings through which Miss Esther McCready, of the 500 block North Dallas street, sought admission to the School of Nursing.

Judge Smith ruled that the State afforded Miss McCready equal educational opportunities when it offered her a nursing course at the Meharry Medical College School of Nursing in Nashville, Tenn.

First Involving Compact

The McCready case was the first case to be instituted involving use of the Southern States' regional educational program for white and Negro students. It did not, however, concern the legality of the regional compact itself.

Strong objections, in fact, were raised by the Board of Control for Southern Regional Education against use of the compact as a defense.

Intervening in the McCready case, it declared: "It is not the purpose of the board that the regional compact and the contracts for educational services thereunder shall serve any state as a legal defense for avoiding responsibilities established or defined under the existing state and Federal laws and court decisions."

May Affect State Program

Maryland's own out-of-State scholarship program subsidizing tuition, travel and living costs of Negroes going to non-Maryland institutions to take work offered at the University of Maryland may be affected by today's decision.

The State is spending some $150,000 annually for such students, otherwise eligible for admission to the University of Maryland.

Hall Hammond, attorney general, said he did not know whether an appeal would be taken from the high court ruling. He said it would be up to his "client."

His client, Dr. H. C. Byrd, president of the University of Maryland, said, in turn, that the question of appeal was a matter for the Board of Regents. He said he expected it would be discussed at a special meeting of the regents tomorrow at College Park, called for another purpose.

Cites 2 Higher Decisions

Both Supreme Court decisions cited by the Maryland court—the first in 1938 and the second in 1948—had been handed down after the Maryland court ordered in 1936 that Donald G. Murray, Baltimore Negro graduate of Amherst College, be admitted to the University of Maryland School of Law.

Mr. Murray was one of Miss McCready's attorneys in the case decided today.

The Maryland court left open, in the Murray case, the question of whether it was sufficient, in fields other than law, for the State to send a Negro student outside Maryland for study in a course offered within the State to white students.

"Since the Murray case the question there left open has been passed upon by the Supreme Court and has been foreclosed in a way that permits no distinction between the study of law and the study of nursing," the court said today, in an opinion written by Judge Charles Markell.

Quotes Supreme Court

The opinion was largely confined to a review of the McCready case and quotations from the Supreme Court rulings.

It cited the historic Gaines decision in 1938, involving a Negro applicant to the University of Missouri law school, for which Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes wrote the majority opinion. The opinion, much of which the Maryland court quoted, said in part:

"We find it impossible to conclude that what otherwise would be an unconstitutional discrimination, with respect to the legal right to the enjoyment of opportunities within the State, can be justified by requiring resort to opportunities elsewhere. That resort may mitigate the inconvenience of the discrimination but cannot serve to validate it."

Said the Maryland court:

"It would be bold indeed to suggest that the late Chief Justice ever used words without due regard for their meaning. His words might be subsequently overruled or qualified by the court.

Words Not Overruled

"But the words quoted have not been overruled or qualified. On the contrary, a case from Oklahoma, essentially the same as the Missouri case, was argued on Thursday, January 8, 1948, and was reversed on the following Monday."

In the Oklahoma case, in which Mrs. Ada Lois Sipuel Fisher sought to enter the University of Oklahoma law school, the Supreme Court said:

"The petitioner is entitled to secure legal education afforded by a State institution. To this time, it has been denied her although, during the same period many white applicants have been afforded legal education by the State.

"The State must provide it for her in conformity with the equal-protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and provide it as soon as it does for applicants of any other group."

"Cannot Subtract Anything"

The Maryland court concluded: "We cannot subtract anything from what the Supreme Court has said. It would be superfluous to add anything."

The court discussed at some length the establishment and provisions of the regional compact entered into by Maryland and other Southern states, and the University's attempt to persuade Miss McCready to attend Meharry under the regional program. It then said:

"The offer to petitioner of a course in nursing at Meharry Medical College, therefore included every advantage except the one she now insists upon, viz., education in a State institution within the State of Maryland.

Can't Extend Boundaries

"Respondents stress the regional compact and the contract for training in nursing education. The terms and details of these agreements between Maryland and the regional hospital are not now material."

"We may assume, without deciding, that the compact is valid without the consent of Congress. Under the contract the board are only agents—or ambassadors—to negotiate a contract for nursing education between the State of Maryland and Meharry Medical College. Obviously no compact or contract can extend the territorial boundaries or the sovereign dignity of the State of Maryland to Nashville."

The University of Maryland "misinterpreted the purpose of the compact," according to a statement by Dr. John E. Ivey, Jr., director of the Board of Control for Southern Regional Education, in explanation of the board's position.

Text Of Ruling On Nurse Training

The following is the text of the Maryland Court of Appeals decision in the case of Esther McCready vs. the University of Maryland:

This is an appeal from an order dismissing a petition for mandamus to require the governing board of the University of Maryland and its School of Nursing to consider and act on petitioner's application, made February 1, 1949, for admission as a first-year student in the School of Nursing, without regard to race or color, and admit her to the school upon her complying with the uniform lawful requirements for admission.

No material facts are in dispute. Petitioner is a Negro. She has all the educational and character requirements for admission. She was refused admission solely because of her race.

The School of Nursing is a branch or agency of the State government. It has been so held as to the Law School, University of Maryland v. Murray, 169 Md. 478, 483.

Ratified Regional Compact

In 1948 the State of Maryland and other Southern states, without the consent of Congress under Section 10 of Article I of the Constitution, entered into a regional compact, which was subsequently amended and, as amended, is set out in and was ratified by Chapter 282 of the Acts of 1949, effective June 1, 1949, relating to the developing and maintenance of regional educational services and schools in Southern states in the professional, technological, scientific, literary and other fields, so as to provide greater educational advantages and facilities for the citizens of the several states who reside within such region.

By arrangement pursuant to the regional compact, the State of Maryland has sent a number of white students to study veterinary medicine in a school in another state and has sent, or is willing to send, Negro students for the same purpose to a different school in another state. No instruction in veterinary medicine is offered by the University of Maryland or any other State agency in Maryland.

Pursuant to the original compact, a contract for training in nursing education, dated July 19, 1948, was made between the Board of Control for Southern Regional Education, "a joint agency" created by the regional compact, and the State of Maryland relating to nursing education of three first-year students from the State of Maryland in Meharry Medical College, School of Nursing, at Nashville, Tenn. Meharry Medical School and its School of Nursing receive Negro students only.

Declined Offer Of Study

In August, 1949, the University of Maryland offered petitioner a course in nursing at Meharry Medical College at a total overall cost to her, including living and traveling expenses, which would not exceed the cost to her of attending the School of Nursing at the University of Maryland. Petitioner declined the offer.

From the uncontradicted testimony, in ample detail, of Dr. Pincoffs, since 1922 professor of medicine in the University of Maryland Medical School and chief physician at the University Hospital, and other witnesses called by respondents, it seems clear that in other educational facilities and living conditions the Nursing School at Meharry College is not only equal but superior to the University of Maryland Nursing School.

The offer to petitioner of a course in nursing at Meharry Medical College, therefore, included every advantage except the one she now insists upon, viz., education in a State institution within the State of Maryland.

Respondents stress the regional compact and the contract for training in nursing education. The terms and details of these agreements are not now material. Neither agreement mentions race. We may assume, without deciding, that the compact is valid without the consent of Congress. Under the contract, the board are only agents or ambassadors—to negotiate a contract for nursing education between the State of Maryland and Meharry Medical College. Obviously no compact or contract can extend the territorial boundaries or the sovereignty of the State of Maryland to Nashville.

Cite Law-School Ruling

In University of Maryland v. Murray, supra, the court affirmed an order for the issue of this writ of mandamus, commanding the officers and governing board of the University of Maryland to admit the petitioner, a Negro, as a student in the law school. It was contended, among other things, that the State had discharged its obligation to the petitioner by providing certain scholarships at Howard University in Washington.

This contention was rejected because the petitioner had a "rather slender chance" of getting a scholarship and, if he got one, would be subject to traveling or living expenses to which he would not be subject at the University of Maryland law school.

The court, in its opinion by Chief Judge Bond, remarked, "And as the petitioner points out, he could not there have the advantages of study of the law of this State primarily, and of attendance on State courts, where he intends to practice." Supra, 488.

As has been indicated, this was not the ground of decision. In its opinion the court also said, "Whether with aid in any amount it is sufficient to send the Negroes outside the State for legal education is a question never passed on by the Supreme Court, and we need not discuss it now." Supra, 487.

The statement last quoted from the opinion, by Judge Bond, in the Murray case left open the question whether it is sufficient to send Negroes outside the State for education like that given white students in Maryland, and the remark first quoted left it arguable that in this respect there may be a difference between the study of law and the study of nursing.

Question Passed Upon

Law in Tennessee is not the same as law in Maryland; presumably a sound education in nursing is the same in Tennessee as in Maryland. The statement last quoted from the Murray case was of course correct when made, but it would not be correct if made now.

Since the Murray case the question there left open has been passed on by the Supreme Court and has been foreclosed in a way that permits no distinction between the study of law and the study of nursing.

In Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada, 305 U.S. 137, the court reversed a judgment of the Supreme Court of Missouri which denied a writ of mandamus to compel admission of a Negro to the University of Missouri Law School.

One of the grounds of the deci-ion of the State court was that "adequate provision (had) been made for the legal education of Negro students in recognized schools outside of this State." Supra, 348.

The court, in its opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, referred at some length to the Murray case, quoted the above question specifically left open in that case (supra, 345), and referred to the remark first above quoted and to similar contentions made in the Missouri case. Supra, 349.

After mentioning these contentions, the opinion brushed them aside and decided the question left open in the Murray case on broad grounds which are no less applicable to a school of nursing than to a school of law.

Cites Basic Consideration

"We think that these matters are beside the point. The basic consideration is not as to what sort of opportunities other States provide, or whether they are as good as those in Missouri, but as to what opportunities Missouri itself furnishes to white students and denies to Negroes solely upon the ground of color.

"The admissibility of laws separating the races in the enjoyment of privileges afforded by the State rests wholly upon the equality of the privileges which the laws give to the separated groups within the State.

"The question here is not of a duty of the State to supply legal training, or of the quality of the training which it does supply, but of its duty when it provides such training to furnish it to the residents of the State upon the basis of an equality of right.

"By the operation of the laws of Missouri, a privilege has been created for white law students which is denied to Negroes by reason of their race. The white resident is afforded legal education within the State; the Negro resident having the same qualifications is refused it there and must go outside the State to obtain it.

"That is a denial of the equality of legal right to the enjoyment of the privilege which the State has set up, and the provision for the payment of tuition fees in another State does not remove the discrimination.

"The equal protection of the laws is a pledge of the protection of equal laws." Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 353, 359. Manifestly, the obligation of the State to give the protection of equal laws can be performed only when its laws operate, that is, within its own jurisdiction. It is there that the equality of legal right must be maintained.

"That obligation is imposed by the Constitution upon the States severally as governmental entities—each responsible for its own laws establishing the rights and duties of persons within its borders. It is an obligation, the burden of which cannot be cast by one State upon another, and no State can be excused from performance by what another State may do or fail to do.

"That separate responsibility of each state within its own sphere is of the essence of statehood, maintained under our dual system. It seems to be implicit in respondents' argument that if other states did not provide courses for legal education, it would nevertheless be the constitutional duty of Missouri when it supplied such courses for white students to make equivalent provision for Negroes.

"But plain duty would exist because it rested upon the State independently of the action of other states.

"We find it impossible to conclude that what otherwise would be an unconstitutional discrimination, with respect to the legal right to the enjoyment of opportunities within the State, may be justified by requiring resort to opportunities elsewhere. That resort may mitigate the inconvenience of the discrimination, but cannot serve to validate it." Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada, 305 U.S. 37, 349-350.

Words Not Overruled

It would be bold indeed to suggest that the late Chief Justice ever used words without due regard for their meaning. His words might be subsequently overruled or qualified by the court. But the words quoted have not been overruled or qualified.

On the contrary, a case from Oklahoma, essentially the same as the Missouri case, was argued on Thursday, January 8, 1948, and was reversed on the following Monday, with the following per curiam opinion:

"On January 14, 1946, the petitioner, a Negro, concededly qualified to receive the professional legal education offered by the State, applied for admission to the School of Law of the University of Oklahoma, the only institution for legal education supported and maintained by the taxpayers of the State of Oklahoma.

"Petitioner's application for admission was denied solely because of her color.

"Petitioner then made application for a writ of mandamus in the District Court of Cleveland county, Oklahoma. The writ of mandamus was refused, and the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma affirmed the judgment of the District Court, 100 Okla. 36, 180, P. 2d 135. We brought the case here for review.

"The petitioner is entitled to secure legal education afforded by a state institution. To this time, it has been denied her although during the same period many white applicants have been afforded legal education by the State.

"The State must provide for her in conformity with the equal-protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and provide it as soon as it does for applicants of any other group. Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada, 305 United States 337 (1938).

"The judgment of the Supreme Court of Oklahoma is reversed and the cause is remanded to that court for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

"The mandate shall issue forthwith." Sipuel v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, 332 United States, 631, 632-633.

We cannot subtract anything from what the Supreme Court has said. It would be superfluous to add anything.

Order reversed, with cost, and case remanded with direction to issue the writ of mandamus as prayed, except as to changes required by lapse of time.
