PHILADELPHIA, October 4.
Friday Night last Charles Quigg, a Lad about 15 Years of Age, was barbarously murder'd by one Thomas Ruth, a Servant of Mr. Wall's, in Strawberry Alley. The Parents of the Boy were both from Home when the Murder happen'd, upon which the Fellow had form'd a Design of robbing the House in their Absence; and accordingly went into the Room where Quigg was asleep, and with a Hatchet was breaking open a Chest of Drawers, which awak'd him; and asking Ruth what he was about, receiv'd a Blow with the Hatchet on his Head, which he (Ruth) thought had killed him; but on hearing him groan a little after, repeated his Blow, which broke Part of his Skull, and gave him several Strokes on the Breast: After this he carried him down Stairs, thrust him down the Little Houfe, and threw some Clothes over him: He then took what he thought proper from the House, and went off. The next Morning a Sister of the Lad's, a young Girl, who happen'd to step out of the House that Night, came to get in, but found the Door fast, and no Body to answer her; however she got into the House, and saw some Blood on the Floor, and in the Bed where her Brother lay, and traced it to the Little House, where she saw a Candlestick standing on the Seat of it, which made her imagine her Brother was murder'd, and thrown in there. She then alarm'd the Neighbours, who came and got the Lad out. Ruth endeavour'd to get away in a Skallep; but the Master of her taking him for a Runaway, turn'd him above, when he was immediately taken up for such; and on his being brought to Town, was known to be the Murderer, carried before the Chief Justice, examind, and sent to Jail, where he is confin'd in one of the Dungeons.
