MARYLAND

Containing

PARIS, July 28.

AT a Time when we are pouring Troops into Germany, to the Assistance of the Empress-Queen, the People are here alarmed with an intended Invasion on the Part of the English, who, it is assured, are making great Preparations for attacking us on the Side of Normandy, their Plan being, as it is said, to attend the Demolition of Breft, Orient, and other Places along the Coast; taking the Opportunity of the Absence of the greatest Part of our Marine Force now in America. The Court however does not appear ready to make any Alteration in its Design, contenting itself with ordering a considerable Number of Troops for the Security of the Coast.
Paris, July 29. On the Receipt of the News of a new English Squadron appearing off Toulon, a great Council was held at Court; and a Commission was dispatched to Madrid the next Morning. In mean Time we learn, that a Matter of momentous Concern is at present on the Tapis between the Court and that of Spain. Some will have it, that the whole System of Spanish Politics is inverted, and that a new and extraordinary Collision is likely to be the Effect of the close Connexion between France and Vienna. There are others, however, who as warmly assert, the Period is at Hand, striking an effectual Blow to that Sovereignty, the Seas so long usurped by the English.

Paris, August 1. Count de Contarins is expected to sail from Breft with 18 Ships of the Line, and 12 Frigates, with which he is to observe that the King is fitting out in England for a secret Expedition, he will perhaps, on his Side, execute an Enterprize to be likewise guessed at.

Paris, August 12. The List sent to the Court of the Killed and Wounded on our Side, in the Battle of Hastenbeck, is as follows:

Killed	17 Officers,	17800
	1038 Soldiers,	1159

Frankfort, August 7. The unfortunate Count Zittau has fallen the Victim of a War in which was no ways concerned, few Houses remained what are greatly damaged, and several Hundreds of the Inhabitants perished in the midst of Flames. The Besieged cry out against the Impatience of the Besiegers, and they in Turn lay the Blame on the Obstinacy of the Besieged, and the Imprudence of the Inhabitants. However, if we may believe the Austrians, they got into the Town Time enough to save Sacks of Flour.

Dresden, August 4. According to the Reports we have received concerning Zittau, the Inhabitants of that Place, in the Middle of the Siege, Bombs and red hot Balls that beat down their Houses, or set them on Fire, used their utmost Efforts to save at least Part of their Effects, reckoned, that as soon as their Town should be taken, they should feel the Effects of the Mercy; and indeed the Austrian Generals seemed to spare them: But among the Troops in Possession of the Town, there were Pandour-vonians, and such like Irregulars, who, making Distinction between the Inhabitants and the Soldiers, took but little Thoughts about relieving former, and imagined, that whatever they could pick up was lawful Booty. The Warehouse filled with various Goods, especially Linens, in Zittau traded largely, were almost entirely down, or plundered. Those wretched Inhabitants, deprived of the Succour they expected, and of almost every Thing, were drove to a great Number had no other Course but to seek Refuge among the Prussians. The Prince of Prussia, seeing them come in, the Corps he commanded, afforded the Relief was in his Power. The Queen of Prussia, sensibly affected with the deplorable Fate
