The following is a Copy of a Letter from Landon Carter, of Virginia, to his wife, and which has been requested by our Readers to Publish here for the Province, as they think it a sensible Performance on the Subject, and a Perusal of all; and therefore we do without any further Apology.

To COLONEL P. DEAR SIR,

I T gave me so much Pleasure to see you pertained with my Farm, that I can't say you will own with me, that it is and, as I wish you may be tempted of some of it, I have now undertaken Method that I have used to bring it to such perfection, as to equal, if not exceed, the most counts of its Growth, even in those Author fond of alluring others into the Cultivation Exaggeration.

Necessity, as well as Inclination, has prompted me to do something in the Farm was for a long Time discouraged, by the So fortunately built on: You know it is of generally called Black-Jack Land, that is, remarkable for the creeping Gray Moss, and Oaks (vulgarly called Black-Jacks) that grow on it; and whenever any of it is cleared before it throws out any Thing of the nature of the Bloom, or Broomstraw Grass: it is only brouse on, when every Kind of it may be, retired into Winter-Quarters, and better than dried Sticks. But you may now try to have overcome this Discouragement some little Genius, which has directed me that have made my Land almost fit for production, may say, excepting Indigo, which I must attempt; because I was always satisfied with seemed to promise Something more real than which too often vanishes before a Man is well with most destructive, if continued, when as As in such a Soil, every Kind of Grass, or sward, must be artificially introduced, I was sought others the Lucern; but in this I'm tolerable Success, because all the Authority on it, say that it was not proper for any but having Recourse to an Experiment I had go of it, on a Plantation where I then lived of Lightness of its Soil, I found it was at observation that those who had written their ignorant of its Nature, or, if they had supplied the Want of Knowledge, and a superabundant Degree of Imagination; though it would do tolerably well on light or answer, in any Proportion, to the Trouble that would attend the growing it. After the second Experiment of it, and that with a few soft clayey Parts of my present Garden, with the usual Care of a Gardener, it would not sanguine Expectations; and that the if Lands was no Kind of Obstruction to the Root, which kept its Course downward in Length, in two Years; besides many that shot from the Crown of the Plant, and perhaps oftener) and took their Course Nutrition. On the Strength of these it Year undertook near an Acre of it, in by Creatures with an early Green Food; by could at Least save my Wheat (which, without say we often graze to a prodigious Extent) and indeed prevent many Deaths which we too frequently call the Consequence when it really appears it is too often owing extreme Poverty, or sometimes perhaps to a union by its Constitutions in the Body, kept by the dry astringent Food that it, though innocuously, given to them during the Winter only be properly thrown off by what the fast Forge, to which Purpose the Stock is admirably adapted.

I expect some Gentlemen will here reply that may be a good Medicine, yet Cattle when any other Kind of Grass is in Bite, contradict any of them, so as to bring on a Point; but this they must give me Leave to assert any such Conjecture; and even at this season great Part of my Fields are perfectly sweet Clover, natural to most of the Country (a Seed to which you see I have set of my Lands) my Cows come Home usually on it. If I wish to add to the Lucern in Brutes, it should be to teach (as I understand) and give them none of it, nor any their Stomachs came to: but perhaps they may vary with it as I sit.

The Method I took to grow this Grass was by Observation, partly from the Reasons as follows: viz. that the Lucern is a very early Sown, before the Grass has gottings, some here and there of a burnt Brick dug out of the farm Ground some Year
