THE NORTH-BRITON, No. LXI. To the NORT.H-BRITON.

SIR, GREEABLE to the Promise GREEABLE to the Letter, I I made in my last Letter, I finall now proceed to consider the Religious Grievances of the AMERICANS; which, tho' not carried, as yet, to fo great a Height as those of a civil Nature, are, nevertheless, as real, and, if allowed to continue, and to operate their full Effect, may per-haps become, in Time, still more intolerable. What I mean, is, the Defign that has been formed to inreduce into AMERICA, the Episcopal Persuasion, as the established Religion.

This Defign, which is now no Secret, has justly excited the Apprehension and Indignation of almost every AMERICAN. They fay, and they fay it truly, that it was in order to free themselves from the Tymany and Despotism of the Ebiscopal Hierarchy, that their Ancestors abandoned their native Country, and took Refuge in the barren Wilds of the Western Continent. And, is it to be supposed, that they will patiently bend their Necks to a Yoke, which reither they nor their Forefathers have been able to bear? Is it to be supposed, that, after having enjosed, for fo long a Time, the Bleffings of Religious, and confequently of Civil Liberty, they will tamely firego them without a fingle Struggle? Those who think so, know not human Nature; for every one bat knows it, muit be fully fatisfied, that there is acthing of which Mankind are fo very tenacious as of their religious Principles; and that almost every Attempt to change these Principles, in Opposition to the Humour of the People, has terminated in the Destruction of the Person who made it. Witness the injudicious and ill-timed Attempt of King CHARLES the First to introduce into Scotland the Episcopal Form of Government. For it may be fafely affirmed, that retwithlanding the many rude Encroachments which that Prince had made upon the Civil Rights of hi English and his Scottish Subjects, neither of these People would, at least for some Time, have risen in Arms, had it not been for the violent Step, which his Majerty took to change the religious Principles o the latter. This was the true Source of the Civi Wars; and, in the like Circumfances, will eve be the Scarce of Civil Wars. Nor, indeed, is it a all furprising that it should; for can it be expected that a People should change their Religion, thei Manners, and their Cuiloms, in an Instant, and wit the same Rapidity with which a Prince, or his Mi titry, may publish the Ordinance that establishes

The Truth is, most Ministers consider the People as Clay in the Hands of the Potter, which they thin they may mould into any Shape they please; but am afraid, that our present Ministers will find th Auenienes competed of very different Matter. am afficid, that, inflead of Clay, they will find the composed of Steel, that will break before it will bend, and will perhaps cut the Hand that shall a

But admitting the Poffibility of establishing Ep. May in AMERICA, fuch a Scheme, could it actual te executed, ought to be ilrenuously opposed erery Friend to his Country; as, were it once act ally executed, it would certainly be attended wi the most pernicious Consequences. It was, I thin a Saying of King James the First, No Bisho KING; and, might I take the Freedom of o points a Maxim of mine to that Reyal Chepper of Sonata, I would fay, and, I believe, with equal True No Dissenter, no Liberty. The Dissenter are, and ever have been, the very Life and Soul the republican Part of our Government. They has often faved it, when upon the Brink of Destruction and it is to be hoped, they will still fave it, if e thould be again brought to the Brink of Destr

The Puritans,--fays a celebrated Historian who cannot be supposed partial to that republic Sect—the Puritans preferred alive the for Sparks of the Love of Liberty that were to be for and of the Two first Princes of the STUART Li And, whatever Ridicule may be thrown upon Puritans, by fome Court Sycophants, I must conf for my own Part, I would rather be a Puritan, tached to Law and Liberty, than a Churchm attached to Slavery and Despotism: I would rat
