OF THE DEAD OR HOLD THY PLACE far word from the Ghost's own mouth. irous as I am of retling in peace after ravail and inquietude, I come from the material being, conjur'd up by the p- erge, of which I shou'd have been n- n cloth'd with all my corporeal passio- nfold it to the oh! mine accuser among ve Spirits, after we have shuffled off the retain, for a season, a portion of what to which we were most subject in parts in life's brief scene. It is not, and sober word of a Ghost! (for he goblets hurry our serene tempers to excess) with a design of babbling or boasting of mine own in- tance, of my birth, education and profession, that I as revisit the glimpses of the moon; but to purge any yet unexpired taints of sin (which I may have contracted when in the body) by freely confess- ing that I shared my failings in common with my fellow mortals; and to cry out to thee with the voice of truth, that it is not only mine own, but the judg- ment of all mine incorruptible brethren, into whose family thy spirit must shortly be adopted, when en- dured from its present gross prison, that thou mightest be inspired, without neglecting the minutest duty of thy Order, to tear the frailties of a departed brother, and thy once substantial friend from their dread a- lone. Hear O! Hear thou Holy Man! the determi- nation of a spiritual judicatory, from which there is no appeal! The outrage which thou hast offered to memory is beneath and all unbecoming thy rank, profession and education. Thou hast done much to me, to take occasion to disparage me, when I could no longer oppose thee with my arm of flesh. How thin- ness to make thus circumstantially publick thy conversations either at balls or more private resorts, especially after such a lapse of time, could possibly concern any man alive, I cannot in my present situation determine. But in all thy future repetitions be above every malignant suggestion! So may none of thy conversations or infirmities at balls, or in less conspicuous circles, be rehear'd within thy corporeal hearing, to deepen the jovial crimson of thy cheeks! and (if per- adventure, any monument should survive thee, of what thou hast either said or done) may thy harras'd spirit be compelled by no reproaches to take the journey which I have taken! Repent oh! Repent! and let not this warning be heavy on thy Soul! for I go—farewell! I forgive.
