To the P U B L I C.

Thall be the business of this paper to state fully a late transaction, that you, my sellow citizens, may understand it and judge for yourselves.

The general assembly, at their April session in 1783, passed an act, empowering the governor and council to appoint an agent, and investing him with certain powers and authorities respecting the bank stock of this state: and by the same act they authorised the governor and council to give a conditional commission, not exceeding four per cent. As it was their duty, and the commission was liberal and competent, they looked for one of the ablest characters in the flate, and appointed him agent. There is nothing in this act, which relates to law-suits or bills in chancery, nor was any authority communicated to prosecute or discind suits in law or equity: the expenses therefore of such proceedings were unforeseen, and consequently never considered, nor comprehended in the commission, which the act allowed the agent.

The agent, in August 1783, embarked for England and after the ablest efforts and the most distinguished excitons of talents and address for upwards of six months, he sound it impracticable to accomplish the great objects of his agency, and therefore reloved to return: but, which he was making preparations for his voyage, one of the trustees of the bank stock exhibited a bill in chancery against him, and he was stopt by process from the chancery court. Upon which the voyage, one of the trustees of the bank stock exhibited a bill in chancery against him, and he was stopt by process from the chancery court. Upon which the agent filed a bill against the trustees, and then followed a bill y certain British subjects, to be indemnised out of the bank stock for their conflicated property.

The agent was thus involuntarily involved in chancery suits, and detained in England: and it is but justice to acknowledge, that in profecuting and defending these suits, he gave the most signal proofs of a great lawyer and saithful agent.

By his indefatigable exertions, the chancery bill.

By his indefatigable exertions, the chancery bill, which the truftee fired against him, was in the course of three months brought to an liearing and decision; and by the same continued and unremitted labour, with the continued and unremitted labour, vigilance, and attention, he completed the proceedings upon his bill against the trustees, and obtained an hearing so early as July 1784: but his counsel had scarce opened the argument, when the chancellor interpoted, and stort surface are considered. opened the argument, when the chancellor interpoted, and stopt further proceedings, suggesting the propriety of making the ATTORNEY-GENERAL of England a party to the bill. I his the agent peremptorily refused, as it in-plied an acknowledgement that the British crown had an interest in the bank stock; and he immediately addressed the British minister, stating the circumstances of the case, and requesting, that it the forms of proceeding should require the attorney-general to be a party, that he would direct him to make a disclaimer of all right and interest in the crown: but no answer party, that he would direct him to make a disclaimer of all right and interest in the crown: but no answer was or could be obtained from the minister. Here then was a difficulty, which the agent saw could not be removed but by the general assembly of this state; leaving therefore these chancery proceedings in the hands of the ablest counsel in England, he embacked and returned to Maryland.

The general assembly, at their November session 2784, took into consideration the faithful services of their agent, and returned him their thanks in the sollowing resolve, viz.

SAMUEL CHASE.

Annapolis, 21A December, 1784.

By the House of DELEGATES, December 3, 1784. On reading and considering the several setters to his excellency the governor, from Samuel Chase, Esq. respecting his agency, Resolved ananimossis, That it is the opinion of this general assembly, that the said Samuel Chase, Esq. in conducting and negotiating the affairs of this state, lately entrusted to his care as agent, hath manitested great zeal, fidelity, diligence, and ability, and a vigilant attention to the honour and interest of this government, and that his said conduct merits, and therefore hath, the approbation of this general alfembly.

which reloive was agreed to by the senate, two gentiemen only dissenting.

During this session, the assembly passed a supplementary act to the act respecting the bank stock, by which the agent's appointment was confirmed, and all his proceedings in chancery established; and the governor and council were directed by the said supplementary act to instruct him to prosecute his bill against the trustees with all visour and expedition.

And during this session the house of delegates passed

And during this fession the house of delegates passed the following refolve, viz.

By the House of Delegates, December 15, 1784. Resolved, That the intendant of the revenue be au-Referved, That the intendant of the revenue be authorifed and directed to pay Samuel Chafe, Efq; five hundred pounds sterling, for the expences already incurred by him in the two suits in the high court of chancery of Great-Britain, one against, the other by him, respecting the stock in the bank of England belonging to this state, and in compensation for his detention in England for his mention in Confequence of the said suits, and for his personal services in defending. the faid fuits, and for his personal services in desending, prosecuting and maintaining, the right of this state to the faid bank stock.

By order, W. HARWOOD, clk.
This was differted to by the fenate, who afterwards fent the following message, viz

By the SENATE, January 14, 1785.

Gentlemen, We have considered your raessage by Mr. Cramphin, and will agree to a refolve to advance to Mr. Chafe the fum of five hundred pounds sterling on account of the bank stock, to be applied to the payment of the agent's commission, if the bank stock or part of it is received; and if no part of the bank stock is received upon which the agent is to draw commission, then to be accounted

J. Dorsey, clk. By order. This was dissented to by the house of delegates, who then paffed the following reloive, viz.

By the House of Delegates, January 15, 1785. Resolved unanimously, That the intendant of the revenue be authorised and directed to pay Samuel Chase, Eig; the sum of five hundred pounds sterling money, to be deducted out of his commission on the bank to be deducted out of his commission on the bank stock or any part thereof that may be received, after allowing him the assual fees and expences paid (or to be paid) by him to counsel, solicitors, and the officers of the court of chancery, in the suits in the said court respecting the bank stock, and if no part of the said bank stock is received, the agent shall account for the said money advanced to him, after allowing him the expences of the suits as aforesaid; and in such event the legislature will take into consideration the services of the agent, and the loss he will in such case sustain By order,

W. HARWOOD, clk.

But this was rejected by the fenate.

The business of the session being completed, the house of delegates adjourned to the spring, and the senate to the tall; and the first time of adjournment having elapsed, the power to call the assembly devolved upon the governor.

The agent, agreeably to the supplementary act, was now called upon by the governor and council, and di-

The agent, agreeably to the supplementary act, was now called upon by the governor and council, and directed to profecute his bill in chancery with all vigeur and expedition. He immediately requested an advance of money to pay the fees and costs of the suit, and declared, without such advance, he could not comply with the act, or the directions and instructions which were given him.

most pointed terms exprest that intention, by directing the suit to be prosecuted with all vigeur and expedition: he confidered too, that the wants and necessities of the state required the most expeditious recovery of the bank flock: and having some knowledge of legal proceedings, he knew the great risk and danger of having suits abandoned by countel for want of money, and left exposed to such rules and orders as the adverse party might obtain.

But how was the agent to be supplied with money? Must the governor exert his constitutional authority, and call the assembly, and consequently create a very considerable expence? This appeared to be a very inexpedient could be luggested to prevent it.

Amiust these difficulties and embarrassments, the governor conceived it his duty to take fuch measures as he thought the best for the interest of the state; he converted with his council, who were of opinion the mo- fettling or pasting of accounts for public services: this ney ought to be advanced out of the public treasury, if the circumstances of the treasury would admit it the addressed the intendant upon the subject stated his difficulties, and submitted the propriety of the advance to his opinion and judgment. The intendant thought such an advance was the best expedient that could be adopted, and accordingly made it, taking bond of the agent to account for the expenditure and surplus, if any.

Upon the meeting of the assembly, the governor took the first opportunity to communicate the transaction by an address, and the intendant took the earliest opportunity to report it.

opportunity to report it.

This, my fellow citizens, is the mighty transadien, which some men would misrepresent and swell into a crime of the sist magnitude, requiring a legislative investigation and inquiry: a transaction, which originated from the purest intentions, and was evidently calculated to prevent an unnecessary accumulation of our public debt. our public debt.

I will now consider some of the principal objections which the konsurabl accusers of the late governor, and of the intendent, are pleased to make to this transaction.

They fay, that this advance for fees and cefts was made after the senate had express their disa probation of it on agitating its propriety during the session.

I will admit, for argument's take, that the senate had exprest a disapprobation of such an advance for fees and cests; what, I ask, is to be interred from it? Not, I hope, that the governor and intendant had wantenly diffegarded their opinion and sentiments. Wickey and ditregarded their opinion and sentiments. Wicken and mitchievous spirits only can suggest such an idea, or draw such an inference; men of candour and humanity will think and reason very differently; they will consider the circumstances and events, which intervened the disapprobation and the advance; they will consider the difficulties which arose after the session, and which the senate could not have foressen; also makes the soluted from the law which the senate could not have foresten as some control of the session of the se which the lenate could not have foreless i dimenties which refulted from the law, which the general affembly passed, directing a profecution of their right with all vigur and expedition; they will also consider, that the governor could not possibly comply with this direction of the legislature without a supply of money, and that he had no other alternative than to recommend an advance of it out of the public tradition with one of the supplier tradition. he had no other alternative than to recommend an advance of it out of the public treatury, or to call the affembly, which would put the flate to a very confiderable heavy expence; and confidering the tranf chon with such temper and cardour, they would find that the governor and intendant were influenced by no other motives than a regard for the interest of the state.

But I contend, that the senate never expect any disapprobation of such advance for their and costs. I have examined the journals of the senate, and contend in no such opinion or sentendent expects or desired.

fin no fuch opinion or fentiment express or declared.

It is true, the fenate diffented to the two reloives from the house of delegates: but let it be remembered, that those resolves contained other material object he-fides an advance to pay feer and cofis: the first proposed an advance to pay expenses already incurred, and an indemnification for the agent's detention in England: the other contained an engagement to make compensation at a future session. It cannot therefore be interred merely from the senate's diffent to these resolves, that they were opposed to an advance to pay fees and cofts, when there are other material grounds on which the dissent might have been given.

But it is said the senate's message implies a disappro-

But it is faid the fenate's meflage implies a difapprobation of such advance. I deny it: there is no such implication: it only says; that if the bank stock be not recovered, the money shall be accounted for. But how accounted for? Is there any thing in the message, which prevents; on such accounting, a discount of all legal expenditures or claims in bar?

Suppose the advance had been made in the very terms of the senate's message, and the bank stock not recovered one commission received. Suppose the agent account for the money advanced, agrees the talled upon to account for the money advanced, agreea ly to the fenate's proposition, and the agent should exhibit an account in bar of feet and costs, that he had paid equal to the sum advanced him; would be not be entitled so a discount of such claim, and to balance accounts with the state? In my opinion, he would be most unquestionably entitled to such discount.

without such advance, he could not comply with the act, or the directions and instructions which were given him.

The governor now found himself under very considerable difficulties and embarrassiments. He law it was the clear intention of the general assembly, that there should be no delay in protecuting their right in the chancery: they had, by the supplementary act, in the

of their honours: but it can be a matter of wonder to those only, who are unacquainted with our constitu-tion and government, and the laws which relate to our money transactions.

Let it be remembered, that the power to adjuft, liquidate and pass accounts for sublic services, is delegated by act of assembly to the Auditor and internation, and that the power to draw on the treasury is by law also delegated to the interdant; let it be remembered, that by the common law of the land, and by all the principles of equity and confeience, every eitizen his the right of discounting; and less it be remembered, that by the CONSTITUTION and COVERNALISM OF this state, the senate have nothing to do with
