ings? Let an act of Banishment be passed against the a ring wretch, who thould prefume to carry supplies to them, until want, remorfe, shame and contrition reduce them to reason!

NEW-YORK, March 3.

The requisition of congress, says a correspondent, on which desends the honour and faith of these flates, moit earneilly demands the attention of every individual in America. The legislatures throughout the states, must have the support of the body of the people; and on the other fide, if the legislatures are dilatory, the people are in duty bound to express their sentiments; if our pledged, "faith and honour lay bleeding under the cruel torturings of individuals; if we perceive a defire to treat the calls of congreis, as the mere bablings of children; or a difpcfiction to reward the generofity of our allies with the greateit ingrati uce ; if it has become a ferious national quettion, whether we shall maintain our ho-nour and faith?" and there appears a great number of individuals willing to facrifice both; when these things take place, it is full time the people should inquire the carie, and fearch out the reasons for this conduct. A nation dutiliture of honour, or public faith, is more despicable than a nation of flaves; we fought to free ourielves from flavery, but is it to be prefumed, that America will never with to acquire her liberty, at the expence of her probity .-The respectable legislature of this state, it is hoped, will ever remain superior to such reflections.

The daily complaints of our poverty, are an affront to Heaven; and we may reasonably expect that in return tor our ingratitude, our land will be cuifed with a univertal iterility. If we were a poor people, without any internal refources, there might be fome plea for our complaints: but our foil, climate, and the luxurious display of our fields, too fully prove the fashty of our affertions; and argue the greatest implety to that Providence who crowns our labour with his richings -- We have on mies among us, who laugh at our conduct, and please themselves that we are crumbling to find. They congratulate each other on our want of virtue; and with pleasure o serve the decline of our republicanism, patriotism, taith

PHILADELPHIA, March 9. By the late papers from South-Carolina, we find that the debates of the house of senate and repretentatives of that flate, are published in a very ample and fatisfactory manner in the Charleston Morning Pod. The members of both houses appear to ponen a very high digree of elequence and apilities: turns are more freakers in proportion to the number, than in the British parliament. But what redounds more to their honour than either eloquence or abilities, is, that their proceedings are marked by a candour and lineral ty, which proves that no low cavilling, quibbling or party spirit prevails among them. Would to bleave, the same could be said of all the flates !- We fliait give one very fliong inflance of their enlarged spirit, which reflects the highest honour on them. On the 8th ult. the Lill for velting in congress a power to regulate the trade of the United States, was debated for the third time in the houte of representatives. It was admitted on all sides, that this bill would be very likely to injure South Carolina, by limiting the number of veffels to carry her produce. Neverthelets, it was contended for pretty generally, and met with hardly any opposition, that it was incumbent on that flate to facrifice i me of her interefts to her fifter flates. This noble principle (which came down to the house enforced by the tirongest recommendation of gover nor Multirie) prevailed; and the bill was passed, and forwarded to the senate for concurrence. How much more laudable is this conduct, than if that body, split into parties, had spent the time in vain nugatory quibbles about trifles; or had fuffired themselves to be so far led away from the good of their country, that one side of the house should esteem it sufficient cause to oppose a measure, merely because it was supported by the other! Yet this is too often the case in the assembly of Pennsylva-The likelihood of disunion arising from the great diverfity of interests between the northern and fourhern states, whereon were founded the strongest hopes of Britain, is now entirely annihilated. W South-Carolina thall have paffed the above act, there will remain but Georgia of the fouthern thates lias r.ot yet vested the necessary powers in congres :and little doubt can be entertained that the example of her neighbour will powerfully operate on this younger filter of the union. New York, which has continued obstinate, is now addressed by a variety of able writers, whose praise-worthy endeavours will, it is hoped, produce the wished for effect in her
