To an American abroad.

WHEN diffant scenes thy vivid fancy fire, And novelty her thousand smiles displays-Calm e'en the pulse of elegant defire, Nor mingle fentiment in passion's blaze.

E'en the soft thrills which gentler bosoms burn, Which virtue feels-e'er act, to thought is giv'n; These e'en may bid th' unguarded bosom mourn, It's soft responses to the voice of Lleaven.

For sure if aught amid our whimly pow'rs, The meed of praise-or name of Heav'n demands; 'Tis that foft thrill that flings its balmy show'rs, Where whispers love, or puty rears her hands.

'Tis that soft thrill which Mira's eyes disclose, When virtue droops-or merit finks in shame; That streams the tear to sympathetic woes, And warms thy break, cold forrow, with its flame.

Ah 'tis that thrill too! which o'er Juliet's face, The veil of saddening repentance fling:-: That mingles with her fading form, difgrace-And points a new seduction's lingering stings.

Each feeling check-of torture or of bliss, Sense and true taste admit of no extremes : Fools fondly feek enjoyment in excess; And sleep in Eden, by embracing dreams.

E'en in the thought most dear to warmer souls, Let not thy fancy paint her forms too fair-: Think not thy friends--'tween whom an ocean rolls-Partake thy pleasures-or divide thy care.

For when around thee on thy native strand, They cluster thick-with gay inquiring eye-: 'Tis mem'ry yields their dull unmeaning hand-[figh. While warmth and truth both prompt thy buriting

A stranger thou amidst thy friends shalt move, With naught the withering lapse of time to heal: And scarce one breast shall own thy early love-And none thine awkward fondness deign to feel.

Fat prejudice with doll unanswer'd tongue, Her knell shall ring, with bigotry of sound-: Envy rejoice to fee thy bosom wrung-And praise intentional produce a wound.

And beauty's eye all potent as a god! Shall look suspicion with mysterious air-; Arraign, though filent, every scene thou'll trod, First pierce—then drive, thy bosom to dispaire

And what avails that thou with trembling hand, To call the sweets of various thought estay'd-; Deck'd out thy garland for thy native land, To see it doom'd to dark oblivion's shade.

Each soft refining of the polish'd heart, With all the luxury of a mind illum'd, Shall wear the semblance but of skilful art, And to suspicion's lingering curse be doom'd.

That light which sheds a glory round the head, The pow'r shall seem, and wish, of mighty harm: The various gift in love's foft bow'r to plead, rippear a pestilence and cease to charm.

Then full with keen remembrance thou wilt tread, The mouldering tombs-and weep o'er friendship's stone-

And in thy filent suffering mid the dead, Forget, though living, that thou too -- " art gone"

AN unjust and false report having been raised, and industriously propagated, by some malicious perfon, on Saturday afternoon, the 26th ultimo, that the governor refused to lend the citizens of Annapolis some of the public powder to celebrate the adoption of the new constitution by the convention, before it was ratified, urging, "That he did not confider himself at liberty to consume the public powder without the advice of his council," and we having beard the faid report, incautiously mentioned the same in company, without further inquiry to ascertain the anthenticity of the report, we therefore take this public method of declaring, that upon examination we found that the faid report was unjust and utterly void of foundation, and that the governor, required that the members, who had voted for the upon application on behalf of the citizens, previous diness to lend the citizens fuch ammunition and on nance as they might want, and to that purport gat orders to the armourer for the delivery without fu ther reserve, than that he should take a receipt for the same; in justice therefore to his excellency's conthe citizens, we think it our duty to contradict the If the majority of the committee should not publish said report, and to acknowledge, that on full inquitheir narrative, the gentleman, who addresses you ry we have found the same to be groundless, and
