went out after there from Lexington, and the farmers about subscribed 50 dollars for a scalp; we expect they will fly from this in a short time."

ANNAPOLIIS, May 223 E CDOTE.

AT the meeting of the convention for this flate, was moved by, a member, that Mr. Thomas LLOYD, of Philadelphia, Should be admisted to take by the hame of the Occoquan Works, -1 his feat is a leat in the convention, for the purpose of taking equal to any in the state for water-works, as it stands down, in mort hand, the DEBATES of the members on navigable water and is supplied by a large and conon the constitution proposed for the United States & Stant Strang and Mr. Lloyd was permitted, by general consent, to take a leat by the clerk. The opposents of the ratification of the mational government, without certain previous amendments, made their objections, and assigned their reasons in support of them, which Mr. Lloyd took down for publication. Alter many objections were stated, and the necessity of amendments was strongly urged, and seemed to gain friends, the ADVOCATES of the government, in consequence of a preconcerted plan the preceding morning declared, "That they were elected and instructed to ratify the constitution, and to do no other act; that tiley did not confider themselves authorised to confider ANY amendments; that a very great majority of the convention were determined to act accordingly; and therefore that all objections and arguments against the constitution, by its opponents, were unnecessary and useless." Notwithstanding this declaration the opponents continued to make their objections, and REPEATEDLY called on the ADVO-CATES of the government, and earnedly requelted them to answer the objections, and to remove them if not well founded; but they inflexibly preserved an obstinate and contemptuous filence, and called for the question; as if their numbers alone would be a latisfactory, irresistible, and conclusive answer to ALL objections.-After the vote of ratification, forty eight of the majority voted for the appointment of a committee " to consider and report amendments, to be recommended to the confideration of the peopie, if approved of by the convention" Mr. Lloyd, a warm and decided friend to the new constitution, frequently expressed his concern at the filence of the majority, and declared that it would never do to publish the objections and arguments against the constitution without any answer .- After the convention was diffolved, the majority made a collection for Mr. Lloyd, to defray his expences, and he declared his intention not to publiff what he had taken cown -It is observable that Mr. Lloyd has bitberto only published the speeches of two gentlemen or the Penn'y vania convention in favour of the government. If Mr. Lloyd should publish the arguments of the epposition in that convention, it will probably be after the decision by all the conventions.
