moved; in the mean time, and until the best of kings being exposed to the canopy of Heaven without a morbe restored to the power which he had priced, that of sel of bread to eat, or a second change of cloaths to put being serviceable to his people, it was the duty of the on. But the purity of climate, and sertility of soil, other two branches of the legislature, to provide for the public safety, and to supply, the defect occasioned by his majesty's illness, which had interrupted the exercise of the functions, belonging to the other branch of the legislature.

When he turned his thoughts on this subject, it was impossible not to take notice of some doctrines that had been laid down in the house of commons, and supported in another assembly by great legal authority. It ranks of people, has so effectually operated, that the within two miles of Chaptico, one of which contain. had been afferted that the heir apparent had a right to inhabitants now not only seem to forget their missor- ing about 185 acres, and the other about 70 acres. the regency and administration of public affairs during tunes, which they have so lately and severely felt, but All those indebted to the late captain Eden, are rethe incapacity of a king. heir apparent was the fittest object for the choice of parliament, when there was a question of making a regent, but at the same time he contended, whenever the heir apparent was appointed regent, his regency was not the creature of the law, but of parliament.

He was forry that the question of the prince's right to the regency had ever been started; but fince persons of fuch weight had contended for it, it was fit that parliament took it into consideration. The two houses should be jealous of their own rights, and not suffer them to be infringed through servile complaisance. It is a duty they owed themselves, their country and pos- proposed amendments hinted at the danger of their terity, and to the prince himself, and to his illustrious house, not to suffer such a question of right to remain anoat; they inouid come to a vote upon it, and fettle it for ever. Such a proceeding could not possibly produce any bad consequences; but would, on the contrary, secure the tranquillity, not only of the presentg eneration, but of posterity.

He declared that the measures he was about to propose did not arise from any personal consideration; he would most willingly have concurred in supporting the right of his royal highness to the regency, if he had found it any where but in affertions of members of parliament. But his duty to his country, superior to all other confiderations, compelled him to withstand the doctrine of such a right, and to shew, as he trusted he had shewn, that it was unfounded in law, and overturned by every precedent to be found in the history of the

He then moved three resolutions,-

1st. That it appears that from the present state of his majesty's health, his majesty is incapable of transacting public affairs.

2d. That it is the duty of the lords spiritual and temporal, and of the commons of Great-Britain, to supply the deficiency occasioned by his majesty's illness, in one of the three estates of parliament.

3d. That the person who should be appointed regent, be empowered to give the royal affent to a bill for creating him regent, and for limiting the powers that shall be vested in him.

The first and third resolutions were agreed to without a division; but the house divided on the second, which was carried by a majority of 64.

In the debate it appeared to be understood in all parts of the house, that Mr. Fox is soon to supercede Mr. PITT in office.

When Dr. Willis was examined relative to his majesty's situation, he said, he entertained very little doubt of his recovery. Experience in that line enabled him to affert this with the greater confidence. In the course of 18 years practice he had known several persons of different habits and ages affected with that species of malady, nine-tenths of whom recovered; scarce any relapsed, and those that did, on being a second time restored, continued ever after without having the slightest visitation of that disease. On the question, if he could point out a reason for his majesty's illness, he answered, that he really believed, attention to public bufiness, living too abstemiously, and taking too much exercise, were the causes; and that the medicines he had prescribed were intended to counteract those causes; and that from their effect he was induced to believe his opinion on those points was well grounded. Being asked the shortest and longest time of recovery, he replied, the shortest from fix weeks to two months, and the longest a year and a half.

One hundred families are now said to be starving in the Liberty for want of employment, all in the weaving branch, we presume. To these may be added one hundred more in other arts, who are suffered to droop and fall from the stalk like blasted flowers. How melancholy is the reflection, that in a country famed for the noble virtues of benevolence and hospitality to strangers, so many useful natives, willing to earn bread in their respective callings, should pine with hunger and ill-natured or proud neglect!

Many of them with the friendly affiftance that reigned to each other, in the calamity, contributed much to their relief; and above all, the continual exercions of his excellency governor Miro, on this melancholy occasion, to render their situation as agrecable as possible, has done him great honour. His excellency's upright administration of justice held out on one hand, and his most benevolent heart on the other, nobly dispersed to all TRACTS of LAND, lying in Saint-Mary's county,

March 17. The punctuality with which the senators and representatives of the New-England states have assembled at New-York, in consequence of the facility of travelling in that country, at the present season of the year, fays a correspondent, marks in strong colours the necessity of a more southern spot for the immediate residence of congrels. The fouthern states have in all their trade being sacrificed to the local views of the New-England states. Nothing can prevent this, but a centrairefidence of congress, which shall favour equally the early and punctual attendance of every member of congress. Philadelphia or Baltimore should be preferred to New-York. If they are not, in the first session of congress, it will lay a foundation of animosities that no government can prevent or heal.

AUGUSTA, (Georgia) January 17. Extract of a letter from a gentleman in the Cherokee na on, dated Pine-Log, November 25.

"I returned from Ustinare two days since, havin been sent for by the head men to read a talk fi general Winn, superintendent for the southern department, likewise the resolves of congress, and the proclamation dated the first of September; all which gave the Indians great fatisfaction, for now they plainly iee that congress is determined to do them justice in regard to their lands; they are very glad to hear that a friendly treaty will foon be held, as the superintendent informed them that he has wrote to the executive of North-Carolina to fix a time for that purpose.

"Yesterday Carey, the linguist, set off for Seneca with a long talk from the head men and warriors, addressed to congress and the superintendent; they all strongly defire that peace should be immediately established between them and the white people in the new state. They mention in their talk that they look upon the people of that state to be very deceitful, which they have experienced, and as they are afraid of them, they keep out spies on their frontiers."

BALTIMORE, March 20.

Letters from Glasgow, received by a vessel which arrived in Virginia a few days ago, dated the 3d of January, mention, that the prince of Wales was appointed fole regent, that there was a total change in the administration-but that, however, Mr. Pitt, still retained a majority in the house of commons, which it was presumed would occasion the dissolution of the present, and the calling of a new parliament.
