On their arrival at the cathedrals which was lighted up by a prodigious number of lamps, the holy will, in all probability, be the feat of war; and general Campbell, when the accounts left India, was preparing an encampment of 10,000 Europeans, and a much greater number of natives, to be in readiness to repel the expected mischief whenever it may appear.

Extract of a letter from the Hague, March 3. The triple alliance between Holland, Great-Britain and Prussia, is now in great forwardness, and will probably be completed in a few weeks. A courier of this day, brought news to Mr. Gomm, the British secretary and Charge d'Affaires, of the king his fovereign's complete recovery. That event will be celebrated in Holland with great joy, particularly at the Orange palace."

Extract of a letter from Triefle, February 20. We learn from Bosnia, that a Capigi Bachi is arrived there from Constantinople, with a firman of the grand signior's, for cutting off the heads of four Turkish commandants, who delivered up their posts to the Austrians, without first making a proper defence. The Porte having the greatest interest in defending Bosnia, they have already sent two thousand Albanois thither, which are to be followed by ten thousand more, to oppose the progress of the Germans."

At Constantinople, we understand, that there has been an infurrection, which lasted three days. The populace, enraged at the ill fuccess of their arms, wished to make a sacrifice of the captain pacha and grand vizier.

It is thought that Dr. Willis will not retire from town, as it is expected there may be great occasion for his abilities towards the relief of several of the members of opposition, whose heads are not strong enough to bear the shock caused by a late recovery.

March 17. We are informed that his majesty has fuggested the propriety of passing a regency bill, before the close of the session of parliament; wherein the names of the queen and some of the cabinet will be inserted, to prevent that confusion which must otherwife occur, should it ever please the Almighty to afflict this country with a return of his majesty's disorder.

We understand the vacant blue riband is given by his majesty to Mr. Pitt.

The Spanish, Prussian and other foreign ambassadors, who had the honour of an audience with his majesty on Wednesday last, speak in the most confirmed manner of his majesty's happy recovery.-He took up the subject matter of their last audiences with the clearest recollection, and discussed foreign affairs with such precision and familiarity as if he had not the interruption

Extract of a letter from Copenhagen, March 3.

"An attempt has been made here to burn the Ruffian fleet by an incendiary, one captain O'Brien, from Ostend, whose ship lay amongst them, fast in the ice, it had been planned to let on fire, that a general conflagration might ensue.-Providentially it had been discovered in time; for, if it had succeeded, half the town would have been blown up by the large quantity of gun-powder on board the Russian men of war. He has been bribed by a Swedish emissary, and was to have received a reward of 4000l. sterling. O'Brien is arrested, and is to take his trial; but the villain who planned this horrid plot has unfortunately escaped."

PITTSBURGH, (Penusylvania) May 2. It is with fingular concern we announce to the public, that on Saturday the 25th ult. a party of Indians murdered, on the head waters of Dunkard creek, in Washington county, five persons, one man by the name of Joseph Cumbridge, and his wife, also a man named William Thomas, and two children. It is unnecessary to make any comment on the impropriety of wasting time and money in holding treaties with the favages, as long experience has shewn us the futility of fuch measures; we have now only to trust to the exertions and energy of our new government, and flatter ourselves such effective plans will be adopted, as to extirpate this country of such savage neighbours. The following deposition will shew the truth of the above.

and unwilling to be controled by legislative authority. "The election of general Washington to the presidential chair, and the expected choice of Mr. Adams as vice-president, will have an auspicious tendency. Europe, as well as America, concur in the praises due to that great and good man, and are well convinced, that nothing which can degrade your national character, or diminish your national consequence, will ever meet with his affent. Mr. Adams by being employed in the diplomatic line in England and Holland, must have had the bett opportunities of making observations on the politics of Europe, as well as on the internal lystem of policy and public credit which have aggrandized these nations, and rendered them to con nieuwis for their refounces Such knowledge must be of eminent service to you in your arrangements of finance.

"Your situations and resources entitle you to hold a high rank amongst the powers of the world. If your government is well administered, you will soon feel your consequence."

The funeral of admiral Greig, which was made by order of the empreis of Russia, at her expence, was very solemn and magnificent, some days before it took place, the body of the deceased was exposed on a state bed in the hall of the admiralty, which was hung with black, and lighted with filver luftres, having the doors ornamented with white crape. The body lay on an arch of three steps, under a canopy of white crape.-On the last step; at the foot of the bed, there was an urn placed, covered with black, with filver anchors and streamers on it, and letters of the same metal, as follows: -- S. G. NAT. d. 30 Nov. 1735, OBIT. d. 15 Oct. 1788. And at the head there was an escutcheon, with the titles of the deceased. The body was dressed in the admiral's grand uniform, having a crown of laurel on its head. The coffin placed on fix masfy filver feet, was covered with black velvet, lined with white fatin, and handles, fringes and galons, all made of filver. The pillows for his head and for the state bed were of white fatin, trimmed with rich blond face. On each fide of the bed were three tabourets (Rools) covered with white fatin, richly trimmed with fringe and tufts of gold. On these stools were placed the admiral's staff, and the five different orders of knighthood which had been conferred upon him.---(The enamel of one of the points of the cross of St. George had been carried away, and the point bent by a ball he received in the fight in the Archipelago, with the Turks last war.) On twelve stands covered with black, and ornamented with white crape and flowers, were placed twelve large filver eandlesticks, with funeral wax-tapers. The three flags of the deceased were hung at the head of the bed; two officers of the state major, and fix captains of the marine, who were alternately relieved, attended at the fides of the bed, and two lieutenants guarded the door of the hall, and sub-officers from thence quite to the door of the court; also a number of private centinels.

On the day of interment, the company affembled at noon, and just before the corpse moved, lieutenant-colonel baron Van Den Phalen made an admirable speech in honour of the deceased. After this was finished the procession began to move, which was announced by the firing of a cannon, which was answered immediately from the rampacts and from the squadron, and continued every minute during the whole ceremony. Part of the troops under the command of lieutenantgeneral Kochius lined the street, from the admiralty to the cathedral. The train was opened by a body of Schwartzhaupt's cavalry, with their standards lowered, and preceded by folemn music, under the command of captain Ilig; then followed a company of the empres's grenadiers, with their arms and colours lowered; after them the public school of the town, with their preceptor, then the clergy, and after a herald; next went general Lehman, of the marine artillery, with his two marshals; then the fix stools, with the admirals staff and the enfigns of the five different orders, carried by 18 officers of the state-major, taken from the different corps, who had served under the admiral. The three again on proving property and paying charge. Wi
