LONDON, August 5. Extract of a letter from Paris, July 28, after the regular post, per express.

" HE duke of Dorset is certainly on his deparexpected on the frontiers with auxiliaries from the the command of major Harding, marched against the Austrian Netherlands.

" It is said with some degree of confidence, that a Prussian nobleman is hourly expected with some propotals which would very much strengthen and tend to produce a closer union between the two kingdoms."

M. de Stahl, the son-in-law of Mr. Neckar, arrived in Paris from Switzerland, on Sunday last, and brought letters from him, intimating that he would be there the next day.

The national affembly of France, on hearing that her majesty had mentioned her design of going to the church of Notre Dame, in Paris, sent a deputation to communicate to her mijesty the extreme danger of such a journey in the existing tumults; that they could not answer for the safety of her royal person, and therefore recommended to her to postpone the visit to Paris till order was re-established. The queen accordingly gave up her purpose.

longer on account of the affairs of France, which, it is said, will be noticed in the speech with which the present session is to conclude.

The daily conferences which the French ambassador has with the cabinet ministers indicate a negotiation of no small importance; but the particulars are kept as secret as possible.

Advices from Cherbourg, by the Phœnix packet just arrived at Southampton, say, that Friday se'nnight vast crowds of a most formidable banditti poured in from the country on pretence of scarcity of corn. In their way they laid waste many gentlemen's houses, and not a granary escaped their depredations. They laid open the prisons, and let the felons, &c. free; gutted and pilfered the principal houses, and burnt and otherwise -Richard Harrison, attorney, and W. S. Smith, mardestroyed what they could not conveniently carry off. shal. And Notwithstanding money was thrown from the windows among them, and bread offered at a penny a pound, all did not avail. The mayor's house did not escape their marshal. ravage; and so unmerciful were they, that they broke his carriage to pieces, threw it over the quay, and cut the flesh off the horses' bones with hatchets. As the soldiers took no active part, the inhabitants resolved not to require their amstance, but armed themselves in defence of their property; in consequence of which, the same evening and the next morning about 130 were taken and confined either aboard the ships in the harbour of Fort Royal, or in the prisons in the town. Foreigners and natives for personal security were then obliged to mount national colours in their hats, compoted of white, red, and blue ribands, and the general cry was, " Liberty, and an English constitution!"

By the demolition of the Bastile, a subterraneous passage has been discovered communicating with another state prison, about four miles from Paris, at Vincennes, near the duke of Orlean's chateau.

State prisoners were generally put into the prison at Vincennes, and conveyed under ground to the Baitile. Those who are first put into the Bastile were conveyed under ground to Vincennes. By these means all idea of the situation of the prisoners was completely discomhted.

According to a letter received on Monday from the continent, the courts of Madrid, Turin, and Vienna, are negotiating a plan to relieve France from her present troubles; and it is said further, they intend inviting other sovereigns on the same subject, and to some application has been made already.

The Algerines are committing depredations on the subjects of the three crowns of the house of Bourbon. they have lately taken and sent into Algiers eight prizes, whereof five were French, one Spanish, and two Neapolitan.

One of the French ships, however, was detained only two days, and then suffered to proceed on her voyage. Another, from the West-Indies, was also suffered to depart, but her cargo, confisting of sugar and coffee, was taken from her-The principles of this adjudication no one could comprehend.

A third was retaken by a Portuguese man of war. But unfortunately the crew had not the good fortune so be liberated, as they had been obliged to go on board the captor. The Portuguese, however, found eighteen Algerines in the prize.

The fourth and fifth French ships were confiscated, together with their cargoes, on this principle, " that they were sailing in concert at the time of capture, with the Spanish and Neapolitan ships;" and the crew were sent into slavery.

Thus they wish to live by plundering French property though they affect to be at peace with France. As to the Spanish and Neapolitan vessels, they were condemned as the property of nations with which the Algerines profess themselves to be at open war.

The SPEECH of the KING of FRANCE when he threw himself into the protection of the NATIONAL As-SEMBLY.

" MESSIEURS,

" I ASSEMBLED you to have your advice on the most important affairs of the state; none can be more important, more pressing, or can more affect my heart, than the frightful disorders which reign in the capital at this moment.—The chief of the nation comes with confidence into the midst of its representatives, to avow the trouble which oppresses him, and to call on them to find the means of restoring order and tranquillity. I know that unjust suspicions have gone forth: I know that it has even been circulated that your persons are not in safety. Is it, can it be necessary to assure you of the falfity of such injurious reports-reports contradicted by my known character? If it be, here I am amongst you, as only one among my people, and placing my sole trust in them. Aid me at this juncture in restoring security to the state. I expect this from the national assembly. The zeal of the representatives of my people, united for the common good, warrants this expectation; and confiding in the love and fidelity of my subjects, I have issued orders to the troops to withdraw from Paris and Versailles. I authorise you, I even call upon you, to make these dispositions known in the capital."
