"I must now inform you how matters stand in this country: in several counties the people have rose up against government, with the cry of-No War! The militia have been called out, which has exasperated the people so much, that they have come to a resolution not to give up, until they receive a redress of grievances and no war; I affure you, my friend, it is really alarming-and should France invade this country, as they have threatened to do, they will find a majority of the people would flock to their standard; should parliament not make some very great concessions, soon to appeale the people, the event will be the downfal of monarchy in Great-Britain. The truth of the above, I will answer for, and you have my leave to make it as public as possible.

"I am your friend, and humble servant.

"There is sloop arrived at Marcus Hook, that was sent from France to this place as an advice boat; the andria, on or before the first day of March next. captain is in town, and has delivered dispatches to the president, and to Mr. Genet-they have not yet transpired-it is rumoured however, that the duke of York has been defeated and taken prisoner."

FRANCE. OCTOBER 19.

Billaud Varennes, in the name of the committee of public safety, communicated the following letter. Head Quarters, Maubeuge, October 17, the fixthday of the third decade of first month of the republic, one and indivifible. "The representatives of the people of the army of the north to the national convention; "The repubulican army has vanquished that of the combined despots, who have disappeared before it: and we have entered Mauheuge in the middle of the acclamations of the people and of the numerous garrison delivered by us. The battle laste two successive days, from the break of day till night; we were ready to recommence it this morning, when our reconnouring parties brought word that no enemy were to be seen. Our troops then took possession of their camp, which was arewed with carcates. "Never were more formidable dispositions made against any place. The entrenenments which the enemy threw up with the greateit activity for leventeen days, would have difinayed and discouraged any other than French and republican troops. "Cobourg thought his polition to unattackable, that he said, "I own that the French are sierce republicans, and I should become so myself were they to drive me hence." Our brave fellows being told of this, the post was carried an hour afterwards. The enemy having united all their forces at this decilive moment, forced us for a minute to evacuate it; our soldiers drove them from it a second time; the enemy and all their artillery would probably have fallen into the orphans court. our hands, if the garrison of Maubeuge could have been informed of what was paining on our fide, and made a sortie at the same time that we attacked the enemy in front.

"The coup de effeit of general Jourdan, in having beaten Cobourg, is the beit eulogy of his talents; his patriotism is the theme of all his companions in arms. the was well seconded by the generals under his commaad. You will without doubt again declare, that the army of the north have delerved well of their country.

The enemy, in flying, committed the most horrible devastations. They burnt aimoit all the villages; they revenged their disaster upon the unhappy country people. The law declares that they should be indemnified. This should be done as foon as poi-Mole, and we have provilionally placed the fum of 200,000 livres, at the disposal of the district of Aveines, in order to supply the principal wants of thele victims of Cobourg's imperial and royal rage.

(Signed) " CARNOT, DU QUESNOY, and Another letter from general Jourdan confirmed the news of this victory: The enemy lost 6000 men; we had only 200 killed and 1200 wounded." The national convention decreed, that the army of
