Miss Mary B-K-N, of Rippon-Lodge, Virgi-That elegance of form, that graceful air, Unrival'd shone, among the num'rous fair; But far superior charms adorn'd her mind, In ev'ry art, in ev'ry thought refin'd. She could unconscious of her god-like pow'r Diffuse a smile around, and bless the hour: Friend, daughter, sister, saint, in ev'ry part, Twas her's to please, to soothe, to mend the heart. Was it, that death could envy virtue hene, And smil'd to see the victim on the bier? No! He but bore the present to the throne; she pleas'd her God, he chose her for his own; Took her from hence, where ev'ry pleasure cloys, To taste of uncontaminated joys. Then dry that tear, nor grieve that she is blest With kindred saints, and finds a place of rest. If such on earth, that all avow'd her worth, How bright above beam all her glories forth? The buff, when moulder'd, and the stately pile, (That confident of ages seems to smile In haughty, superiority,) when laid Prostrate in ruin, she the lovely maid Shall rife more glorious, to that happy place Where bliss alone shall reign, and ev'ry sorrow cease.
