Letter from the king of Prussia to the deltor of Mentz, Berlin, January 21, 1794.

The extraordinary urgency of the prefent circumfrances, induces me to write this letter to your highneis, in full affurance of your highness's perfect knowledge of the fituation of Germany, our country. The dangerous crifis in which this country is thrown, by a war without example, with a formidable, furious and deftructive enemy, who already menace the fix frontier circles to enter them with fire and sword; fuch a crifis is too well known to your excellency, not to see the necessity of concurring with me, and with every flate animated with a patriotic zeal, in the most proper measure to ward off the danger.

Among all the measures which the empire can employ, which appears to me more inefficacious against rely, to affert, in opposition to all the guillotine prints, an enemy, whose numbers diminish not, and who oppose a frantic fury in battle, to the resources of tactics and a numerous artillery; nothing, I say, is more insufficient than the general armament of the inhabitants of the circles which has been proposed. This measure, " so dangerous, and so fingularly delicate in itself," is ftill more inadmiffible, because it can in no wise accord with the defence of the empire by my troops, and their retreat must infallibly be the confequence.

> DUBLIN, Merch 29. The English news-papers of Monday and Tuckday are filled with a variety of reports. Lord Elgin's arrival at London afforded matter for firange speculation; among which the illness or death of the emperor was one.

Others reported, that the archduke Charles was gone to Vienna, in confequence of the news secrived at Bruffels from Francion; that the king of Pruffia had withdrawn from the general alliance. It was also faid, that the young king had cicaped from Paris, and was arrived fale at Bruffels.

It does not appear that any account whatever has been received to London of the emperor's judden illusis; any more than of the king of Pruffia's having delerted the general alliance. The news of his Prushan majefty's final intentions in regard to the war, mult come from lord Malmethury at Berlin, and not from Fruman agents at Francfort.-The repurt of the arrival of young Louis XVII. at Bruffeis, artics from young German nobleman of about nine years of age, of great expectations, having arrived there from Francfort, from whence he travels in some flate.-The ruling dæmons of Paris have long held a maiscious and obflinate filence, even as to the existence of the young monarch, and his injured relatives.

We cannot help thinking that the report, (for as yet it is only a report) of the secrition of the king of Prusha from the grand alliance, must be totally uniounded. That an abiolute monarch thouse degrace himself by a pecuniary capitulation with the very dregs of mankind, and should condescend to treat with those who have used towards all kings the most scandalous and verifying epithets, feems to us little less than impossible. Time will develope this mystery. But thus much seems certain, that if it is possible for the French, by force, fraud, or bribery, to diffolve the ailiance against them, every power in Europe will, it its turn, become a prey to the despotuem of their farage and ferocious anarchy; and the only comfort the first seceder can have, will be, Thou shalt, good Nemo, be the last I'll eat."

The arrefts and executions at Paris, continue in fuch degree, that the number of daily victims is incredible. The late reports of scarcity there, are attempted to be contradicted; but, by i'e measures taken to prevent monopoly, and to watch over the fale of their eggs and cabbages, it does not appear that famine is very far from their doors.

April 3. We have authority upon which we can that his Pruffian majefly will not withdraw his power from the general alliance; but, on the contrary, that he will bring more troops into the field this campaign, than he did the last.
