

There shall be no levy en masse in Hungary, nor insurrections; and in Bohemia, no extraordinary levy; no strange army shall enter upon the territory of the house of Austria.

The negotiators shall meet again at Nicholzburg to proceed directly to the opening of negotiations, in order to establish directly peace and harmony between the two emperors.

Done between us the undersigned, marshal Berthier, minister of war, major-general of the great army, charged with full power from his majesty the emperor of the French and king of Italy, and the prince of Lichtenstein, lieutenant-general, charged with full powers from his majesty the emperor of Austria, king of Hungary, &c.

At Austerlitz, 15 Frimaire, year 14.
December 6, 1805.

Marshal Berthier, and J. Prince de Lichtenstein, Lieutenant-General.
Austerlitz, 12th Frimaire, Dec. 3.

Soldiers! I am satisfied with your conduct at the day of Austerlitz; you have justified what was to be expected from your intrepidity. You have covered your eagles with immortal glory. An army of one hundred thousand men, commanded by the emperors of Russia and Austria, has within the space of 4 hours been cut up and dispersed; those that have escaped your swords, have been drowned in the lakes.

Forty colours, the standards of the Russian imperial guards, one hundred and twenty pieces of cannon, 20 generals, more than 30,000 prisoners, are the result of this ever memorable day. That infantry so much renowned and composed of superior numbers, has not been able to resist your charge; and henceforth you have no more rivals to combat. Thus, in two months, this third coalition has been conquered and dissolved. Peace cannot be far distant; but as I have promised to my people before I crossed the Rhine, I shall not conclude a peace but what gives us guarantees, and assures recompence to our allies.

Soldiers! when the French people placed the imperial crown upon my head, I considered in you ever to maintain the same in that high estate of glory which only could attribute value to it in my consideration. Yet in the same moment our enemies thought to destroy the fame, and this crown of iron, conquered by the blood of so many Frenchmen, they would compel me to place on the brow of our most cruel enemies. Illusory and vain objects! which on the very same day of the anniversary of your emperor's coronation, you have annihilated and defeated; you have taught them that it is more easy to make a stand and to threaten, than it is to conquer us.

Soldiers! if every thing which is requisite to insure the welfare and prosperity of our country is accomplished, I will conduct you back to France. There you will be the objects of my most tender solicitude. My people will meet you again with joy; and it will suffice you to exclaim, I was at the battle of Austerlitz! in order to be answered, you are a brave man.

(Signed) NAPOLEON.

BALTIMORE, March 15.
The following is a part of the thirtieth Bulletin:— it was inadvertently omitted in our last translation of the foreign news.

This day will cost tears of blood to St. Petersburg. May it cause that cabinet to reject with indignation the gold of England; and may this young prince whom so many virtues called to be the father of his subjects, snatch himself from the influence of those 30 coxcombs whom England pays with art, and whose impertinencies obscure his intentions, make him lose the love of his soldiers, and throw him into the most erroneous operations. Nature, by enduing him with such great qualities, called on him to be the comforter of Europe. Perfidious councils, by rendering him the auxiliary of England, will place him in history in the rank of those men, who by perpetuating war on the continent, consolidated British tyranny over the ocean, and caused the misfortunes of our generation. If France cannot attain peace but on the conditions which the aid-de-camp Dolgorouki proposed to the emperor, and that baron Novozilof was charged to bring, Russia will not obtain them, even if its army should be encamped on the heights of Montmartre.

In a more detailed relation of this battle, the staff major will make known what each corps, each officer, each general, has done to illustrate the French name, and give a testimony of love to their emperor.

Extract of a letter from Bourdeaux, dated the 25th of December, to a respectable house in New-York.

"Last night we received the official account of a peace having been agreed on between the French and the German and Russian emperors. Great-Britain is now left alone to continue the contest. It is however the opinion that a general peace will take place, in which England will be included."

We have great satisfaction in communicating to the public the following pleasing information, inasmuch as it completely purges the government of all criminal connivance at, or participation in the late mysterious expedition under Miranda. A letter is received in town from general Dearborn, secretary at war, in which he peremptorily declares, that neither the administration, nor any of the heads of departments individually, have any knowledge of the destination of the Leander; that on this subject neither Mr. Jefferson nor Mr. Madison ever had any conferences and communications with general Miranda; that it was not until after she had sailed, that they were advised of her being destined on a hostile voyage; and that on receiving this advice suits were immediately instituted against the parties concerned, and that too, before any representations were made to them by any foreign minister or agent.—[Phil. Gaz.]

A Pocket-Book Lost.

LOST, on the road from Annapolis to Poulton's tavern, a large RED MOROCCO POCKET-BOOK, containing a small sum of money in bank notes, and a variety of papers of consequence to the owner. Whoever has found the said book, and will leave it with its enclosures with the subscriber, at the bank of Baltimore, or with John Kilty, Esq; of Annapolis, will be very generously rewarded.

D. A. SMITH.
March 11, 1806.

AS it can now be scarcely doubted, that the pocket book mentioned in the foregoing advertisement, which was dropped on the 2d instant, has been found by some person who does not intend to restore the contents to the owner, it is thought proper to direct the attention of the public to a note of one hundred dollars, which, besides the loose money, already noticed, was lost with the book, being enclosed in a sealed letter directed to a gentleman in Baltimore. The description of this note is no further recollected than that it was of the Farmers Bank of Maryland, and of a very late emission. If such a note have been or should hereafter be offered in payment, or for change, by any person not apparently in the way of possessing so considerable a sum by honest means, it is hoped that notice will be given as above. If the finder of this book, although not scrupulous enough to restore the money, should be inclined on any consideration to return the book itself, and the papers, instead of destroying them, it can be no difficult matter to leave them where they may be picked up, and whoever, if this hint should be taken, may deliver them as above directed, will be suitably rewarded.
