From the American.

In addition to the important intelligence brought by the arrival at Boston, some few articles have reached us, conveyed by a vessel which has arrived at New-York from Bourdeaux: The principal items of which follow:

It was reported at Bourdeaux on the day captain Skiddy left it, that the king of Prussia had made a separate peace with France. Letters received at New-York on the 8th of June from the French head-quarters mention this circumstance so far as to state that the preliminaries were signed at Oliva, near Danzack, on the first day of that month.

One of the late Paris papers contains the following article:—

"At the same time that the news of the expulsion of the English from Egypt gains credit, it is asserted that a corps of 4000 troops of the same nation, landed in Calabria, has been cut to pieces by gen. Reg-nier. The time chosen for this landing, would make one suppose it to have been concerted with the conspiracy lately discovered at Naples. This would be a fresh reason for being astonished that the English government should always resort to means which but ever proved fatal to it, which would tarnish the lustre of success, supposing they could have any, and which augment a hundred fold the shame of a defeat when it is the result of such manœuvres."

Under date of Naples, 31st May, it is said, "The English landed about the end of this month 5000 troops in Calabria. General Regnier has completely defeated them, 800 remained on the field of battle; the remainder were made prisoners. A conspiracy formed at Palermo, and which was to break out at Naples Corpus-Christi day, has been discovered. The principal conspirators were condemned to death, executed within 24 hours."

The Paris dates by the New-York arrival are to the 25th June, but do not include that day.
The arrival from Nantz, at Boston, is one day later, and was on that day (the 25th) that the news of the defeat of the Russians reached Paris. There can be no doubt about the truth of it. It comes direct from the field of battle.

With respect to the report of a separate peace between France and Prussia, which it is stated previously at Bourdeaux, that seems very doubtful. It hardly have taken place before the last great battle, or there would have been some mention of it in the Paris papers; and the news of the battle is the first that has been received from the scene of war.

The British, it appears, in addition to their defeat in Egypt, have been overcome in an attempt in Calabria. The blockade ordered sometime since his Sicilian majesty was doubtless connected with descent on Italy; but gen. Regnier has added to their evidence to prove that those predatory expeditions of the British are as fatal to themselves, as are fruitless to those unfortunate monarchs they are destined to assist. British aid to the ruined heads of Europe seems to be the sure forerunner of their destruction.

A paragraph from an English paper, would seemingly justify a belief that the public sentiment in England is in favour of peace with this country; while
