LOVE SONG.

I'HEY'RE-fully fools who fonnets fing-To glowing cheeks and sparkling eyes, Or make the hills and vallies ring With lovers vows and lovers lies.

Now I'm in love as much as they, And write at least as honest verse, Of her whose chilling beauties lay Not in her person but her purse.

Her golden charms fo sweetly shine, When rifing to my raptur'd view; That I would rather call them mine, Than any girl I ever knew.

No lips that quiver for a kiss, Nor sparkling eye that ever roll'd, Afford fo rich and solid blifs, As Aura's beauteous bags of Gold.

What the' she's lost the bloom of youth, The rose that deck'd her early days, Has only one decaying tooth, With eyes that squint a thousand ways.

What the' she's lost her flaxen hair? My love shall never know restraint, For half her fex can tell her where To buy her wigs and teeth and paint.

Then, Aura, bless the am'rous swain, Who doats upon your shining charms, Relieve his bosom's tender pain, And throw your beauties in his arms.

And he will clasp it to his heart, Adore them with affection true, And with them never, never, part, Whatever may become of you.

ON RIDICULE.

PERSONS of fense thould carefully avoid that fpecies of light wit, which is shocking to reason, morality and common fense. This is that foolish levity which ridicules age and imperfections. To fee the hoary locks of a venerable old man or woman, made the subject of laughter, is unpaidonable folly, and no fm all degree of vice....Do we not all wish for long life ? and shall we make the very state we are defirous of, an object of contempt and ridicule? No...let us rather bow our heads to old age, and reverence its infirmities. To fee a fool or giddy fop make his empty head mock the helpless paralytic, or raise his shoulders in derilion of an unhappy deformity which is the work of Heaven, is a fin against our Creator, and an infult on human nature! Was the blind man the author of his misfortune? Did the crooked man falhion himse f? Or did the stammerer fix the impediment on his tongue? Certainly not. As the Creator is pleased to form us, so we must remain. Let us then neither repine at our own imperfections, nor look upon those of others with a ludicrous eye. They are misfortunes that we should pity in others, and patiently suffer in ourselves; and not make them the butts of ridicule, or fligmas of contempt. Some persons jest with their neighbours natural defects, and make themfolies merry with his shape, features, or defect of understanding; but fuch jells are barbarous indeed. We are all the work of the Almighty's hand! he distributes beauty and deformity as he pleases; so that the comely have no reason to boast, nor the most disproportioned to blufh; we had no right to exist, much less to be beautiful or witty. Complexion, feature and stature, come not within the reach of merit; they are the free gifts of God, and therefore he that is the best provided with natural perfections, deserves na praife; and he who is the worst no blame: for he it is that made us, and not we ourselves. Tho' the jest be levelled at our neighbour, it rebounds Creator. It mocks the architect and burlefques the Creator. And thus, when you sport upon the creature, you laugh at the fame time, at the Creator, and render yourfelf guilty of blasphemy, as well as fcurrility
