The Influence of Solitude.

Age has quenched enamour'd Fancy's beam,
The cold'ring robb'd Hope's sapphire dream;
With a warm lustre's down the reckless eye,
Tears to mourn, and recollects to sigh;
That can then subdue the unequal strife,
Consumes the wakeful pulse of life?
Will he, feels his nerveless frame decay,
When glooms oppress the shutting day;
Or companions of remember'd youth,
Whose smiles was rapture, & whose language, truth,
To the grave—alone of all the train,
Whom sported o'er the breezy plain,
The rude column of desolating cast,
The sad chronicle of transports past,
For the busy scene of life displays,
The transports of anterior days,
All of early sports, as mem'ry speaks,
Tear trickles o'er his furrow'd cheeks,
Like the stranger Greek, he sighs distress,
It is past, Oh, lay me down to rest,
Not Virtue fear Time's secret rage;
Are delights, which ev'ry pain assuage;
It still as life declines, with soothing charm,
Sours soften, and its pangs disarm
Or, Retirement decks her fragrant bowers,
Richest sweets, and wakes empurpl'd hours;
Or, Thought weaves the balmy couch of peace,
The quick pulse, and bids its fluttering cease;
Meek Religion points with eager eyes,
Rapture triumphs, and Misfortune dies.
