

Poet's Corner.

SELECTED.

MISS MATILDA BELHAM,

English poetess, claims the laurel, her poems, as the editors of the British observe, "are distinguished by much grace, tenderness and simplicity." For herself, we have only to remark, in inducing the following very pleasing extract, that although a rose by any other name would smell as sweet, yet, in the case of many other poets, it would not, or rather fade in colours half so bright as those with which the elegant Matilda has invested it.—[Free. Jour.]

TO A LANGOLLEN ROSE.

Day after it had been given by Miss Ponsby.
blushing flow'r! my bosom grieves
How thy sadly drooping leaves;
While their tender tints decay,
How of fancy fades away!
Grimms, who with zealous care,
Little treasur'd relics bear,
Affume the doubtful mind,
A pausing mem'ry looks behind;
In a more enlighten'd shrine,
Made this sweet memento mine.
So! its fainting head reclines;
Its pale leaf, and pines,
Mourning the unhappy doom,
Sh tears it from so sweet a home!

From Pratt's Gleanings.

THE DOVE.

Said that a pigeon applied warm to the stomach of children in some dangerous maladies, will attract the disease, and with the loss of its own, save the infant's life. A recent fact of this kind lately appeared in one of the public prints.—A beautiful baby appeared to be suffering the pains of death.—Its wretched parent, after many useless tears, had recourse to a dove: the breast was stripped of its feathers, and thus bared, placed upon the breast of the child. By degrees the infant recovered; while the bird, receiving the disease, expired in agonies.

THE Bard has told us, God of Love,
My fav'rite sister is the DOVE;
And oft Love's sister has been styl'd
Sympathy sweet Pity's child.
Who can wonder when she gave
Herself a sacrifice to save
The cradled innocent, whose breath
As purchas'd by thy sister's death?
The babe she to her bosom prest'd;
And transferr'd its anguish to her breast;
Here it respir'd on pity's throne,
And all the agony her own.

Oh! sacred bird! this act shall prove
How kindred to that mytic dove;
Whose pinions mingle in the rays
Here dazzling cherubs scarcely gaze!

THE RAINBOW.

"Refracted from yon eastern cloud,
"Besriding earth, the grand ethereal bow
"Shoots up immense; and every hue unfolds,
" In fair proportion running from the red
" To where the violet fades into the sky."
THOMPSON.

WHEN the sun reflects its rays on drops of water which fall from the clouds, and we are placed with our backs to the sun, and with the clouds opposite to us, we observe a rainbow. We may consider the drops of rain as little transparent balls, on which the rays fall, and are twice refracted or broken, and once reflected. Hence proceed the colours in the rainbow. They are seven in number, and in the following order: red, orange, yellow, green, blue, purple and violet. These colours appear so much the more brightly, as the cloud behind is darker, and the drops of rain fall the closer. The drops falling continually produce a new rainbow every moment, and, as each spectator has his particular situation whence he observes this phenomenon, it so happens, that two men cannot, properly speaking, see the same rainbow.—This meteor can last only so long as the drops of rain that fall are continually replaced by others. To consider a rainbow merely as a phenomenon of nature, it is one of the finest sights imaginable. It is a picture the most beautifully coloured of any which the Creator has exposed to our sight. But when we reflect that God has made this meteor a sign of his pardon, and of the covenant which he vouchsafed to make with mankind, we find subject for more than one edifying reflection. Again; I have the rain pouring down before me, and the sun shining behind me.—Such is the image of my life! a mixture of sorrow and of joys; now clouded with adversity, and now brightened with prosperity; and through whose tears of affliction faith can discern the sign of peace, of brighter scenes the promise!
