

Poet's Corner.

SELECTED.

the Port Folio for November, 1806.

Mr. Oldschool, casually met with a little volume of post-ous poems, from the pen of an extraordinary youth, by the name of Spierin. He was a ve of the state of New-York—His father professionally a clergyman, and pursued the nefs of instruction for many years after his val in this country. Soon after the birth of a his eldest and only Boy, he removed to h Carolina. He took the education of his into his hands, and was the only instrutor ver had. The progress of George was fin-ly and prematurely brilliant. At the age he read Cæsar's Commentaries, and before ad, attained his ninth year, he completed works of Horace. From his earliest infan- he took no delight in the sports of his youth- companions, and he was often known to l from their pastimes, to wander with a nd, and listen to the stories of the Iiad he possessed," says his biographer, "a digni- of demeanor, and an energy of character, ch commanded the respect and admiration of who knew him" He died while in the stu- of the law, promising to have become one of the brightest gems in the regalia of justice. At early age of 16 years and 8 months, he was mitted to the tomb. He fell a victim to ravages of the yellow fever, and was inter- on Sullivan's Island, opposite the city of arleston. s "Eliza's Grave," a chaste effort of taste fenibility, the following trifle was occasi- d. It is the humble offering of a younger a ruder minstrel, to

THE TOMB OF GENIUS. HERE the chilling north wind howls, here the weeds so wildly wave, Mourn'd by the weeping willow, Wash'd by the beating billow, 'Tis the youthful poet's grave: Oath you little eminence, mark'd by the grafs-green turf, The winding sheet his form enclases, On the cold stone his head reposes, and near him foams the troubled surf. 'Tis pass around its base the ocean," serene sleeps the moon-beam there, Naiads love to wreath his urn Dryads thither hie to mourn, and fairies' wild-notes melt in air. His tomb the village virgins ove to drop the tribute tear, Stealing from the alleys round, Soft they tread the hallow'd ground, and weave the wild-flow'r chaplet there, the cold earth mantled, peaceful sleeps he here alone, Cold and lifeless lies his form, Batters on his grave the storm. Silent now his tuneful numbers, Here the son of Genius slumbers,— stranger! mark his burial stone!

The Monitor.

On Rejoicing at Bloody Victories. THE war in Europe has lasted, with short remissions, now about seventeen years, and the blood has been spilt in this period than has been shed for several centuries past in the space of time. "Glorious news," exclaims an acquaintance, "have you heard it?"—"What news?"—"Why the army of — has been beaten in the loss of twenty-five thousand men dead on the field of battle."—"Twenty thousand men killed! That's good; but many lost the conquerors?"—"Only a thousand."—"Would that this news prove true!" Here let us pause, and view this affair with the eye of a moralist, or rather with the feelings of a christian. Thirty thousand fellow beings slain in one battle!—When the sun rose upon them in the morning they were all in health and brisk in spirits; before the day had set their mangled ghastly corpses were heaped together over the ground.—Thirty thousand immortal accountable beings all called together in an instant before the dread tribunal! How sudden the summons! how solemn the trial! how few of them prepared to meet it! Let us extend our view to the scenes of domestic grief occasioned by this battle.—It is reasonable to suppose that those men, on an average, left as many as four near relatives each, to mourn their deaths.—We have sometimes witnessed the overwhelming grief of a single family at the loss of one of its members that has died abroad of sickness, been swallowed up in the ocean, and have felt a degree of sympathy on such occasions. Let here behold a hundred and twenty thousand mourners, lamenting at one and the same time, the fall of husbands, fathers, brothers and friends! We will now come back to the field of battle.—Over and above the consideration of the stain we must bring into the account the wounded also, which in numbers usually exceed the former.—See the bloody field! there lie thousands and thousands of dead; and there also lie thousands and thousands of mangled wretches, suffering the most excruciating pains, pouring out their groans, and calling upon God and man for mercy!
