Captain Wilson, of the British brig Fanry, of Liverpool, feels it his duty to return his most grateful acknowledgments to Capt. Jones of the U. Captain Wilson, from the weak state of his health at the time, feels the more sensible of Captain Jones's kindness to him while under his charge, as he experienced from him, in the fullest degree, all the attention which could be expected from the politeness of a gentleman, and the generosity of a seaman, to his fellow in distress. Taken up Adrift

ON my shore, near Sandy Point, the bottom of an OLD ARK, which contains three logs about 50 or 60 feet in length; the bottom was planked over, but by thumping on the shore had knocked one side loose. I tied it on the shore three days, and it broke away twice in the time. The only way I had of securing it, was by sawing it in pieces and taking it on the shore. The owner may have it again by proving his property & paying me for my trouble.
