THE WRECK-PIRATE.

IS there a heart, enflirin'd in human form, That fee's no pity for a feaman's woes! Whom 'mid the perils of the raging florm, Chance lafe on there, his efforts faviring throws?

Yes, there are mifereants & experience fliows. So bale, abandon'd, loft to all that's good IV ho, when the furious wint'ry tempest blows Watch with a tiger-eye, the raging flood!

Eager for plunder, as the brute for blood-Milereants who, in the horrors of the (More favage than the prowler of the wood,) Raife on the rocky brach the treach rous light !

To cheat the Mariner's bewilder'd fight, As toffing o'er the tide his veffel reels; And, when the lure fucceeds, the full delight, Of hellish mitchief each dark villain feel-

On rapine bent-on murder too, if need, To give a deeper dye to the nefarious deed !

THE GLEANER.

HOW pathetically, and with what deli-cate respect to the chariness of female reputation, has Scienstone pourtrayed his lovely deluded & repentant Jeffy! She is indeed, the artiers maid, " futtain'd by virtue, but fubdued by love." She falls, as a really innocent garl is most likely to tall, not by the temptation of vanity, avarice, or ambition; but by the delire of removing from the mind of beloved object, "affected fooin, artful doubts and pretended rage." She will facrifice herfeif rather than fuffer her infidious feducer to suspect the reality of her affection. The facultice is made, and the becomes, not as a poet would now paint her, more interesting, more amiable, by her credulity; " but scorn'e by virtue, itiginatized by fame," and compelled to fly from a deciding world, the implores the compatition of the traitor by whom the had been undone. But what, shall weath, is the purport of her appeal? Is it to call upon him to fulfil the promite which enfrared her weaknels, or to threaten him with public pu nilliment ! Does an obstreperous abusive father accompany the vindicative offender; propoling, by his overwhelming infolence, to found the future aggrandifement of his fa-inity on his daughter's shame? No, the de jected Jelly, deeply confcious that Henry's arts could not have completed her ruin had not her treacherous heart been his ally, comes, without those whose cheeks she had tinged with shame, to folicit such a pittance as might preferve her from mingling in " the vulgar crew," or begging " her fcanty bread, and allow her to inde her woes in lome remote corner," where, "transithed in the form she " loved, browing virtue would relapte no more." With a de icacy of sentiment which could only enter in o the most refined in agination, the appeals to no other pattion than his pity. The name of wife, which fome artful temale might endeavour to acquire, would, the juilty observes " reither footh her griet nor clear her fame; " lince it could no longer be the free gift of generous love, but the reluctant bond of reproachful compatition. With all the mildness of genuine modefly, flie rather confiders the pange that her miferies may give her betrayer, that the woes which the herfelf endures; and though every object that the beholds fpeaks reproach to her fulceptible heart, and tells her, " we are spotless, Jessy; we are pure ;" she dares not ask for the death for which the languishes, " lest her sad fate flould noursh pangs for" her still beloved [Mrs. West.]

But shall not the penitent be forgiven Unquestionably she shail. Let kindred and friendship hasten to lead home the wanderer and act, as nearly as frail mortality can, the part of those pure and biested spirits who recontrite finner. be made as comfortable as forgiveness can make it ; but let not kindness, with mistak en zeal, feek to divert the mild dejection which ought to accompany remorfe, by feenes of deflipation, or by giving celebrity to what requires to be concealed. The in to what requires to be conceased. The in terests of virtue cannot be promoted, by per-mitting those who have wandered from her to prefide at scenes of public fellivity or to diffrate amusements. The penitent Jel-fy had no wish to shew the face which grief had furrowed, among the happy and the innocent : concealment and forgetfulnels hounded her earthly views. [Ibid.]

PAUL'S DOMESTIC INFALLIBLE COLUMBIAN OIL.

THE inventor of this highly esteemed medicine THE inventor of this highly esteemed medicine is a native of America, and the composition is the production of American soil, consequently it is in every sense of the word domestic, it is not puffed up with a numerous train of pompous foreign certificates of persons from whom by the great distance that separates us 'tis impossible to obtain information, therefore the pub ic has better security for their money as there cannot be the least shadow of deception to cover his medicine, for he simply appears before the community the least shadow of deception to cover his medicine, for he simply appears before the community
