[His Royal Highness the Prince, patron of the regiment, on presenting its co-lours, intimated to the relebrated Capt. Morrice, the most worthy acceptor of Morrice, the most worthy acceptor of Anecreon, his royal wish for an appropriate song to be sung at all festivities of the corps. His royal highness was obeyed by capt. Morrice, with a ferrour which produced the happy thoughts combined in this little piece. The song is preserved in the regiment as a most precious treasure; and is sung on every festive occasion. sure; and is sung on every festive occasion with an exultation which those who have over witnessed its effects have forcibly felt, yet can but faintly describe,]

REGIMENTAL SONG, For the 87th Regiment, called the Prince of Wales Irish Volunteers.

Coxe on brother soldiers! the field is now The cowl's merry music now calls us along; True valour's hest pleas'd, when with mirth it is blended,

'And love's a gay chorus when glory's the song. Then, join in my list now, ye lads of true mettle! The brave 87th our voices shall raise;

The Muse, lads, wherever her eye she may settle, Will ne'er find a subject more fit for her praise. At loyalty's call as a band of true brothers,

We sprang into arms to give strength to her sway, And life, that's a debt, paid to nature by others, We, bro't a free gift, to the prince we obey. Our love for our country's as firm as old

Cato's,
For our blest constitution, our colours we rear: We're the prince's own lads, from the land of potatoes;

And no sound but of glory, has charms for our car.

Our colours his own royal arm hath supported;

The charge of their fame to our honour

And we trust in the field where true glory

is courted,
They'll shine like himself the Great
Hope of the brave.

May union and concord for ever then bind

Through honour's bright field with one heart may we roam! Abroad in all danger the foe ever find us;

And Friendship and Love ever find us at home ! Thus his brave royal line, to the end of time's story, May God and our arms ever shelter and save!

May the Shamrock be ever the crest of true glory!
And the Harp of Old Erin the charm of the brave!

THE GLEANER.

"Sucu," continued the preacher, "being the importance of this union of faith with works, it is the wildest of all attempts to sever them from each other. The hand which would disorder this harmony, is lifted against God and nature. "Faith with-out works," is an expression our religion does not assist us to interpret. For us it has no meaning. God has linked them to gether, and the powers of earth and helt confederate, shall not separate them. Let us not endeavour to do it. Be it our object to convince the unbeliever that the faith of the Christian is the best principle, because it makes the best men.

"But let me not be mistaken. Whilst "Bit let me not be mistaken. Whilst I enforce the necessity of their entiting faith with practice, I would guard against confounding them; for, whilst they are inseparable, they are distinct. A good life is the fruit of a good faith; but let not the fruit be applied to the purpose for which the tree is destined. Faith in the merits of his redeemer, justifies man in the sight of God—works attest his justification; faith wins him Heaven—works thereach him faith wins him Heaven-works bespeak him fitted for it."

From such a view of faith, this veteran From such a view of faith, this veteran in Christianity seemed to catch new vigour in speaking of it. "In teaching you," he said, "to desire and to embrace this principle as the sum and essence of reh ion, I am not palming upon you any cumungly devised fable. The "thousands" who in every, age "have not bowed the knee to "Haal," have unito the measure of faith to be the only the unent of salvation. The Popes for some centuries, have been assuaring the religiou of God to the measure squaring the religion of God to the measure of their swa views, of content with their eneroschinent upon human authority, they dared to wrest from God the sceptic at his grace. They taught that if the merits of Christ and the Spirit of God might be-gin the work of salvation, still man must complete it; and they erected him to be, in some degree rus own Redeemer. Your ancestors saw this, and they sesolved to "stand in the breach and stay the plague." They fought the hattles of the reformation, and the shouts of their victory were heard,

"Worthy is the land who was slain?"
Nor were their principles those only of the days in which they lived. They had consulted the "oracles" of God," and they found this to be "the good old way" of Religion. They saw it printed, and even worn with the footsteps of saints, of prophets and of patriarchs. When the great Apostle of the Gentiles calls up the shades of the mighty dead to record the holy actions by which the service of God has been signalized; he dares not recount their deeds, except in union with the principle from which they sprung. He points to these illustrious men looking through the darkness of ages, their eye fixed and intent upon that "Saviour who was to come." "By faith," says he, "Abraham offered up Isaac; by faith Jacob worship-ped; by faith Moses preferred the suffer-ing with the people of God to those pleasures of sin which are but for a moment. Refuse not to add your names to a catalogue of whom it is declared "the world was not worthy;" cultivate the same principles, pursue the same practice, and "enter into the same glory."
