THE CHRISTIAN.

The glory of God should be the end of all our actions, not only in our most essential duties but in our intercourse with men. As God has called us from nothing into existence, and impressed upon us his own image, we cannot, without extreme ingratitude and disobedience, neglect to glorify him in our bodies and spirits, which are his. This religious tendency of the soul to God, as the supreme lord and the object of our most ardent desire, gives to our actions an excellence above what they otherwise would enjoy. Thus moral duties towards men when they are directed to God, become Divine.—Acts of charity are so many sacred oblations to the Deity. Men are but the altars upon which we lay our presents—God receives them, as it immediately offered to his Divine Majesty and conferred to his honour. After living a life of faith and obedience in the service of the Most High God, what exquisite delight will it be to receive the welcome approbation of our blessed Redeemer, Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord. The anticipation of this enjoyment contributes to our happiness here, and is an additional inducement to every serious and reflecting mind, to make all our thoughts and actions tend to the glory of God and the salvation of our souls. To be rewarded according to the ways of the world for services rendered to others, is what labour has a right to demand for its exertions; but to be made happy for ever; to be rewarded for serving ourselves; for promoting our best interests, our own everlasting welfare, can no where be found but in the abundance of our Redeemer's love.

Well done thou good and faithful servant. What welcome language to the humble Christian! Confidant of imperfection, and feeling no title through his own merits to the Divine Favour, how transporting to him, to be met upon the confines of the eternal world, when his pilgrimage on earth is closed, with that sentence of approbation—Well done good and faithful servant—uttered too from the lips of him, whose judgment is irrevocable. If language fails in describing this exalted, this sublime pleasure, surely it is an object now to ascertain, whether we possess those marks, which prove us faithful to our Lord. It is a question that we may put to ourselves in every walk and circumstance of life, Am I a faithful servant? Do I use the talents, with which I am intrusted, for the glory of him, who is their rightful proprietor; and with reference to that solemn day, in which he will demand my account of them? What man on earth is not interested in this trying question? Who, that possesses not some talent from the beautiful God, which he may improve for his own or neighbour's good, and for the glory of the Giver?

Our matter is not a hard one. He does not expect to reap where he has not sown; but surely it is reasonable, that if he has sowed plentifully, he should expect to reap plentifully.

The man who has much, should ask of God a heart to devise liberal things, and a hand to scatter wide his bounty. His language should be, my wealth is not my own; let me therefore seek wisdom to distribute it from him who placed, and preserves it in my power.

The man of LEARNING and GENIUS will lift an inquiring eye to the "Father of lights," and submit to divine inspection the fruits of his labour before he offers them to the world. He will ask; is this the true use of my mental faculties? will this be for the honour of Him, whose "inspiration gave me understanding?"

The DIVINE will ask his heart before every action, Is this consonant with my high and holy vocation? Is this becoming the character of one who has taken upon himself the trust of a shepherd of souls?

The PHYSICIAN will ask, that his talents may not only be exercised for the temporal, but for the spiritual good of his friends. He will wish above all things, to heal the disorders of his own soul. He will ask that he may be confirmed in the principles of religion by observing the wonderful powers and organization of that system, which he is called to relieve and invigorate. He will desire to look through the material body to the spirit which animates it. He will inquire the cause of its manifold disorders, and feeling "death" to be the "wages of sin," he will then be imperceptibly drawn to look & to fly unto Jesus, the conqueror of death, and despoiler of the grave. Seeing much of the infirmities of the body, and the consequent unhappiness of the present life, he will naturally extend his thoughts beyond it, and contemplate with joy and delight that un-mixed state of felicity above, where sin and death have no place; where the inhabitants shall not say, "I am sick," and where tears shall cease forever.

The MERCHANT, though engaged in the active pursuits of business, yet, feeling that the gain of the whole world would be a miserable recompense for the loss of his soul, ponders upon his plans of profit and asks if they trespass not upon his neighbour's rights, if they interfere not with the demands of religion, if they rob him not of an unreasonable portion of his time, or do not engross too much of his attention, and finally, if he can retain his character of a "faithful servant of his Lord." If his conscience cannot promptly satisfy him in these inquiries, his determination is fixed, to relinquish his delusions. His ambition is to lead a useful life, to exhibit a fair and bright example of a man, engaged in active, extensive business, still having his holy, best thoughts on HIM, who made and preserves him; by whose smile he prospers; and on whose blessing he depends; consecrating to him his earnings, and resigning himself to his disposal, anxious only to secure the "pearl of great price," the favour of his God.

"The POOR MAN, with his small talent of worldly wisdom, and still smaller of earthly goods, convinced that riches are denied him by mercy, that the sources of his disappointment and temptation may not be multiplied, cheerfully accommodates his mind to his condition. He has learned that "Men wants but little here below,

Ner wants that little long."

What powers of mind he possesses, he improves for the edification and comfort of his companions in poverty; he points to the rich "inheritance of the faithful in light," and directs and urges their attention to secure a sure title to that unfading, imperishable treasure. He administers, if not to the bodily wants of his neighbours, yet to their spiritual necessities.—He endeavours in the chamber of sickness, and in the hour of dissolution, to approve himself faithful to his Lord by pointing to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world; and entreating all about him to lay hold, while it is yet offered, on the hope of that glorious Gospel, which is all that can afford rational happiness in life, fortitude, peace, and comfort in death.

We are all hastening to one common end. On this side and the other the young, the gay, the vigorous, and the aged, are crumbling into dust. How often do we witness their departure, follow them to the narrow humble habitation of the grave, and enter again upon the business and the vanities of life, seldom realizing for one single moment, that we also must soon occupy the same mansion. Would it not be wise to make DEATH a friend?

Our blessed Lord, just before he uttered the parable, which gave rise to our motto, left, in one word, to all his followers, this most useful important—solemn lesson—"WATCH." The faithful servant, attentive to this injunction, will never fear the coming of his master; his talent has not been concealed, knowing the goodness of his Lord, he has used it in dependence upon his blessing. To account for it, he is always ready, and as he habitually acts with reference to the day of reckoning, it can never arrest him unprepared. Be this our posture. Be this the present, constant concern of our minds, to be found vigilant and faithful, waiting for the coming of our Lord."

EDWARD LLOYD, ESQUIRE,
