

POET'S CORNER

DR. LADD'S

VERSION OF O'SIAN'S ADDRESS TO THE SUN.

O thou that rollest on high, As round as the shield of my sire!

From whence dost thou beam through the sky? From whence dost thou scatter thy fires?

The stars hide themselves from the day, Thou comest all beautiful dress;

The cold pale Moon hastens away, She sinks in the wave of the west.

But thou in thy course art alone, Who can thy companion be made?

The oaks of the mountains are gone, The mountains themselves are decayed.

The ocean incessant we name, E'en Luna is hidden in night;

But thou art forever the same, Forever rejoicing in light.

When earth is all darkened with storm, When lightning's flash over the ground;

When thunders the heavens do form, Thou smilest in beauty around.

But O'sian no more can behold Thy beam on the gates of the west;

Nor see thy locks sparkling with gold, That flow on the clouds of the east.

Perhaps thou like me wilt decay, The skies thou wilt cease to adorn;

Thou wilt sleep in the clouds of thy day, Nor care for the voice of the morn.

Rejoice, then, oh Sun! in thy might, Since age must o'ertake thee so soon;

Unlovely as glimmering night, As dark as the beam of the moon;

When darkness the firmament clouds, When the blast of the north is abroad;

When the mist every mountain top shrouds And the traveller sinks in the road.

Another Epistle from King Joe to Emperor Nap.

Since I wrote to you last, Misfortunes crowd fast.

At Vittoria they had but begun, Would you know whence I date This sad tale of my fate,

In haste I must tell you, I RUN! * I'm in the name of the place in Spain whence Joseph Buonaparte last sent news of himself to his Imperial brother.

MISCELLANY.

ANECDOTE OF BUONAPARTE.

When Buonaparte was examining the great pyramid with Denon and others, a messenger arrived at the entrance, with information that the Turks had landed in great force on the coast.

Without returning to Cairo, Buonaparte ordered Kieber to join him with the troops there as a reserve, as rapidly as possible, and arrived the next night at Aboukir, to command those that had been collected for him.

With the Generals Lasnes, Murat & Marmont, who accompanied him, were his interpreter & his interpreter's brother, an artist.

They were all in the same tent with their Commander; & when every thing was arranged for the approaching night, they all went to bed.

This artist (from whom I had the anecdote) told me he never in his life was near Buonaparte, without being impressed by his profound & terrible mind.

More than ever, the associations being peculiarly interesting from the time of night, the approach of battle, and the general only awake with a single lamp, he found himself so irresistibly attracted to his features, that he could not sleep; curious to observe whether Buonaparte would sleep himself, he kept his attitude of apparent repose, and fixed his eyes on him with an eager and breathless anxiety.

It was now the very depth of midnight, and to the rumbling of artillery and rattling of arms succeeded the most gloomy silence!

ed longing to have time and eternity in his grasp, that he might wield or controul them as he willed, for his purposes; unable to compose himself, he dug the table with a pair of compasses in agitated spasms, and appeared inwardly to curse the irrevocable limit of being.

Excited nearly to madness by his fiery agitation, he rushed once again to the door, when as if in pity to this victim of passion the day dawned on his heated face with a smiling and beaming freshness, the mists of the morning were rolling away as the light glittered on their roundity, and nature began to awake from her drowsy stupor.

With an energy that marked his delight, roused his generals, mounted his horse, rode through his soldiers, telling them "an army of Turks existed near them, and by ten he expected they existed no longer!"

The battle shortly afterwards commenced, and by ten, indeed, nothing remained of his gorgeous enemies but the melancholy and shadowy remembrance!

CURIOUS DISCOVERY.

Grenvale, (Eng.) Aug. 25.

The remains of a vessel were lately discovered in Ballywilliam bog, about a mile from Portrush, in the liberties of Colerain.

From the examination of the size and form of the ribs and the beams, it has been conjectured that she carried at least, 40 or 50 tons.

Notwithstanding the injuries of time the outside boards still measure an inch and a quarter in thickness; of them, however, only small pieces could be discovered.

Some of the ribs are 8 inches broad, 5 deep, and 7 or 8 feet long; many of them exceeded this measurement considerably.

Neither keel nor mast could be discovered. It was rather to be lamented that she was torn up and carried off before her situation could be exactly investigated.

The timbers are all of oak; several cart loads of it were drawn away. She was found in a mound, about 40 feet in diameter, composed of stones and clay, but chiefly of moss, about 15 perches from the shore of the bog;

the bog has been all cut away around this mound; it is about 6 or 8 feet in height. Several bones have been found in it, to what species of animal they belonged cannot be ascertained; the air speedily dissolves them.

Some silver coins have been found in it, the letters cannot be distinctly discerned; from comparison however, the date of one of them might probably be ascertained; hence the age of the vessel, and the purpose for which she was employed may also be discovered.

In the meantime, nothing but conjecture can be said on this subject. Some are of opinion that at a very distant period, there was a communication between this bog and the sea. This seems to be improbable, as the bog is elevated more than 40 feet above the level of the sea.

At the same time it must be observed that the sea has been retreating for many centuries in the neighbourhood of Portrush, as well as in many other places in the north of Ireland. It could be established, on tolerable authority, that the lands of Cloughbour, Crocknamack, Kernabawn, and Maghremena, were formerly covered with sea water; and that the hill upon which Portrush stands, was surrounded like the Skerries, with water.

Crystal Plate by a Patent of Invention. M. LAURENT, a mechanic at Paris, has just brought the Bute to the highest degree of perfection, by substituting for wood and ivory, chrysal, on which the atmosphere does not exercise any influence.

The form differs not at all from that of the common instruments. Two tubes of exchange suffice for their use; the upper one never requires to be changed. The government has decreed to the inventor a medal and a crown.

Daily Federal Republican

At the commencement of the late session of congress, our readers will recollect, that the reporter for this paper was refused a seat among the stenographers on the floor of the House of Representatives.

By a subsequent resolution the Speaker was required to furnish seats for more stenographers, and they were by the same resolution all to be placed in the gallery. For some reason to us and to the public unknown, this resolution has never been complied with by the Speaker; of course we could not have a reporter in the house this session.

Although, therefore, we have made every exertion that our disadvantaged situation would permit, to furnish our readers with the proceedings and debates of congress, yet many omissions have been inevitable, and these have in no measure been supplied by the time and mutilated abstracts which have been published in the National Intelligencer.

That Gazette is under the absolute control of the administration, and through evil report and through good report, must support the interests and measures of its masters. Hence it has happened that during the late session, although Gales is a stenographer, and has a seat provided on the floor, but very brief abstracts of the congressional business have been furnished, and almost every debate has been suppressed.

The motive for this suppression may be discovered in the manner in which the debates have been conducted, & the issue of the most of them. They certainly would never have raised the reputation of the majority in congress, or have tended to strengthen the administration among the people.

The debates have been extremely interesting and upon the most important subjects. Bold truths have been freely spoken, the errors and vices of the administration have been unfolded. But as our reporter was excluded, and as Gales has chosen to suppress the debates, all has been lost to the people. This evil must be remedied.

If Federal Reporters are excluded the floor, they must with other citizens enter the galleries. But under the resolution above alluded to, before the next session, we presume, new and additional accommodations will be provided for stenographers. And if there is a stenographer in the country competent to give the debates on all subjects in the house, he will be procured for the next session of Congress. It is our determination, if sufficient encouragement is afforded, to issue, besides our present publication, a daily paper during the session.

Facts and events are daily occurring at the seat of government, extremely interesting to all classes of society; and the earliest publicity should be given them through the country.

Those who are willing to patronize the Daily Paper, will send on their names without delay, post-paid. We have no other object in view but to serve the cause, to do which effectually it is necessary to keep pace with the Great Gazette, which scarcely ever issues, without containing some misrepresentation and deception to the injury of the people.

The affairs of administration have become so desperate, that the practice of suppressing altogether or discoloring important information, and of frequently disseminating the boldest falsehoods, requires every effort to increase and strengthen the guards of truth, to counteract a system of organized deception and falsehood, destructive of the best interests of the nation.

The Daily National Intelligencer is chiefly supported by Federal merchants, whose business requires constant and early information. If that information can be as readily derived from some other than the impure source now relied on, it is to be presumed there will be no hesitation in discontinuing patronage to mischief-makers, and directing it to the public, to further the sinister views of an embarrassed ministry.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY JONAS GREEN, CHURCH-STREET, ANNAPOLIS. Price—Three Dollars per Annum.

To the Editor of the U. S. Gazette. When I tell you that I am a young man just turned of one and twenty, that the same time blush to inform you, that I am not in the garb of a soldier. But this be assured is no fault of mine.

Unfortunately my father is one of those persons, who, in the language of the democratic prints, is indiscriminately denominated a federalist and a Tory; and what is still more galling and severe, a peace-man and a noncombatant. What a shocking reproach is this, since to cover oneself with glory, is now ascertained to be the chief end of man; to the utter confusion of the Quaker creed and the Presbyterian atehism!

In fulfilment then of this end or glorious destination, I was bent upon obtaining a commission in the army, and I was the more strongly impelled to the measure, as I am a remarkably pretty fellow in regiments, let me tell you. I have more than once been tricked out in a uniform dress with m. chapau has a langue plume, and its other appendages; and all the ladies who saw me, were charmed with my figure, declaring one and all, that if I would but turn soldier, my fortune was made, since not a soul of the sex, however noncombatant she might be, would be able to resist me. Upon this, without delay, I signified to my father my ardent desire to serve my country in the field, and to apply to government for a commission, being no longer able to endure the cutting insinuation that I was too moral to shed blood without full provocation, or to fight in a cause, because, forsooth, some gray beards pronounced it unjust.

But the old cross-grained curmudgeon of a federalist indignantly spurned my proposal, albeit he had himself been a war-man of '76, and he tauntingly asked me if I aspired to be a slave to the Corsican despot. To this he added some invectives against the president much too harsh to be named before democrats; and swore, that if he heard another syllable from my lips, indicative of a wish to partake in the ignominy of this wicked and accursed war, undertaken (he alledged) for the single purpose of screening a flagitious administration from the just indignation of their injured country, and the condign punishment of their crimes, I, from that moment ceased to be his son; and should be forthwith expelled his parental roof as a scabin vagabond, and fit associate for those miscreants, who, for their own sordid, sinister purposes, made trade of deceiving and betraying the people, who had unsuspectingly placed them in power. Such, must confess it, was the tory language of my father. But what could I do? I was compelled to hear, be silent, and submit.

Still, however, my predilections were my own; and I indulge them in perusing the military details in our newspapers, with all the interest which an amateur of Gallic tactics enjoys, when he reads of troops being formed en potence or en crochet, or being marched en schelon, or being appuyed by a river. By the by editors Binns and Duane, ought to rub up their French a little and be cautious in future, not to print appuyed for appuyed. Neither should the next edition of his Hand Book, to tell us, that the word echillon signifies the steps of stairs, when, in fact, it simply means the rounds of a ladder. But, possibly, in the illustrious house in which our cosmopolite was reared, they were veritable terms, a ladder being a pair of stairs, and a pair of stairs a ladder.

But, ravished beyond measure as I am, with our adoption of the French style of dress and military technicals, I begin to suspect, that we are yet a little awkward in the use of them; and that your en crochet, en potence, and your schelon
