From the N. Y. Com. Adv. July 11 My Mother's Green Grave." Written for the fourth anniversary of her decease. Once more the loud tempest at distance

Since winter has fled to his snow cover'd cave :

light-forted May weaves her Larrand of roses,
To strew on the turf of my mother's green grave.

How oft is the sigh that awaits retrospection,
For a moment to dwell on the days that are past ! Yet deeper the palm of renew'd reco lection, That youth's blooming tints we too lovely to last ! For the heart then exulting, thought not of to morrow, Nor mark'd the thick clouds that frown'd dark o'er the wave; Nor the bright laughing eye shed the dew-drop of sorrow,

That now would fain hallow a mother's green grave.

But life's rapid tide, with its wide swelling anguish.

Has ingulph'd the sweet prospects that smiled from afar;

And left their pursuer deserted, to languish.

languish.
A prey to vain hopes, disappointment and care.

Yet the deep in misfortune's dark mazes benighted, The pilgrim of passion-of error the slave, In the midst of its tumults, the heart is delighted.

To Freathe its sad sighs o'er a Mother's green grave,

Now no more by my childhood's fond guardian attended, Who has watch'd my light steps when they wandered astray, I sek the low mould where her form has descended,

With the "clod of the alley" to moulder away. h! this mansion of solitude, silent and dreary, Is an alms for the poor-a reward for the brave—

To the wand'rer a harron— a rest to the weary—

But more sacred than these—'tis my Mother's green grave. Long beside this lov'd spot the first blossoms shall flourish, That look forth from the tomb at the summons of spring,

And the tears of affection the fla-grance shall nourish, And the Dove hover round, on her dew moisten'd wing.

Soon alas, may I too press the same humble pillow, No longer expos'd on time's turbulent wave:

From my labours redlining, beneath the same wilker. Whose branches droop low on my Mother's green grave.

Ah ! then shall I hail her long nediction : And those verdant retreas her dear presence restore, Where Death will invade the lone couch of affliction And brandish his dart er the wretch. ed-no more.

From the Ligerpool Courier. Cure for the Cancer.

SIR—Having lately met with the following particulars respecting a simple pplication that is confidentity a serted to cure a disease, for the removal of which the most paints expedients have hitherto been deemed indispensably necessary, I request you to give them a place in your paper, in the hope that some of your readers may be induced to make trial of the met there recommended, and companicate to you the result of the experiment. Should it prove as effi. cacious as the French pretitioner asserts it to be. I need not observe that to all who are micted with the cruel disorder in question, the receipt must be of inestimable value. The celebrated Parisian actress, Mademois le Coutat, lately underwent as operation for the cancer. On his occasion Monsieur Ruelle published in the papers a receipt of a far less painful and more steedy/cure of cancer in three day and without surgical operation. " This remedy," says he. consists simply in a piece of dough, about the size of a small hen's egg, and a lump of hog's lard, the older the better, of the same dimensions. These substances thoroughly mixed, so as to form a kind of salve, must be spread on a piece of White leather and applied to the diseased part." In confirdy's M. Ruelle cites Mademoiselle

Chaumers, mother to the bookseller of that name, in the palais Royal who was about to undergo the usual operations, when a woman who had been cured by his application. informed her of it. She joyfully availed herself of this remedy, and, as the Journal de Paris asserts, was completely cured in the space of three days.
