ODE TO THOUGHT-WRITTEN AT MIDNIGHT.

By Henry Kirke White.

Hence andy vindle thought!

Thy pictimes are of pain ; The visions through thy dark eye eaught They with no gentle charms are fraught, ho prithee back again. I would not weep,

I wish to sleep.

Then why, thou busy foe, with me thy vigils keep ?

Why dost ofer bed and couch recline ! Is this thy new delight?
Pale visitant -It is not thine To keep thy sentry through the mine,
The dark vault of the night: Tis thine to die.

While o'er the eye, the dews of slumber press, and waking so rows fly.

Go thou, and bide with him who guides His bark through lonely seas;
And as redining on his helm,
Sadly he marks the starry realm,
To him throu mayst bring ease;
But thru to me

Art misery,

So prithee, prithee plume thy wings, and from my pillow fice.

And Memory pray what art thou?
Ant thou of pleasure born?
Does bliss untainted from thee flow?
The rose that gems thy pensive brow,
Is it without a thorn?
With all thy smiles,
And witching wiles,

Yet not unfrequent bittemess thy mournful sway denles. The drowsy night-watch has forgot

To call the solemn hour; Lull'd by the winds he slumbers deep, While I in vain, capricious sleep, Invoke thy tardy power:
And restless lie,
With unclosed eye,

And count the tedious hours as slow they mis nute by.

MAY DAY; OR THE CROWNING OF FLORA. Ruleigh, (N. C.) May . 0.

I have often heard of the celebrati ons of May Day, but never witnessed the festivities & amusements of crowning the Queen of this joyous season until the entrance of the present month. On the first of May, the young ladics belonging to the Raleigh Female Academy, assembled under the wide spreading trees, which embosom their building, and proceeded to the election of a Queen. Miss Mary Du Dose, of Georgia, was the successful candidate. She was conducted to the rural throne, when being seated, she was, with suitable ceremonies, crowned with a chaplet of flowers The grove thereupon resounded with "Long live Queen Mary." and she received in an appropriate and amusing manner, the felicitations and homage of her subjects. Some slight refreshments were distributed among the votaries of Flora, he students, and the many ladies and ger tlemen who were spectators of the scene. The echoes of the grove were awakened by the melody of must, & the mirthful scene impressed all so happily, that the student will long believe this day was not lost. Mr. Marling, so well shown for his skill and taste in painting, was present and sketched a likemess of the May Queen as she appeared in her ensigns of royalty; and the lovers of the fine arts may expect to be gratified with a sight of the picture at his exhibition galle

To grace the scene we have selected the fairest flowers of spring. They were plucked by the hands of affection, and friendship has entwined a wreath to deck the brow of our favourite girl. Will our Mary deign to accept the short lived tribute of our love? Will she condescend to accept the title of Queen of May? She will; and while she wears this blooming crown, let its decaying bloom remind her of beauty's transient glow, while its fragrant sweetness forcibly inculcates the superior charms of virtue.
