

FORT'S CORNER

From Moder of the Moor, a poem by James Hogg.

WHAT art thou, Love, for whom my thro'...
When thy bow of pleasure...
No more, graced by Reason's hand, is thine...
Child of the moulder'd eye and burning brain...
Of glowing fancy, and the fervid vein...
That left on bed of roses lov'ly to rest...
And trap the flower where lurks the deadly bane!

Oh many a thorn those dear delights invent...
Child of the rosy cheek, and heaving brow...
Thou art the genial balm of virtuous youth...
And point'st where honour waves her wreath on high...
Like the sweet breeze that wanders from the south...
Thou breath'st 'n upon the soul, where embryos lie...
Of new delights, the treasures of the sky...
Who know'st thy trembling watch in bowers of even...
Thy exalted grateful tear, and melting sigh...
Oh never was to yearning mortal given...
So dear delights as thine, thou habitant of heaven!

Extract from Hobhouse's Letters.

THE RETURN OF NAPOLEON FROM ELBA.

Napoleon embarked at Elba, with eleven hundred and forty two men, and in twenty days recovered the imperial crown of France. Some circumstances relative to the expedition were related in my presence the other evening, to General Kosciuszko, by Baron the Colonel Jerzmanowski, commandant of the Polishancers of the guard, who accompanied the emperor to Elba; and, as they tally with the accounts circulated here both in print and conversation, as well as with the famous bulletin of the Moniteur, I shall venture to give a short detail of his information. The colonel commanded at Porto Longone, and had, besides his lanciers, about 300 soldiers in his garrison. Six days before the embarkation the emperor had sent for him, and inquiring what number of vessels were in his harbor, desired him to hire and provision them on his return, and to prevent all boats from leaving the port. He followed his instructions, and was speedily visited by an Englishman, who was detained by this measure, and who represented to him, in the most violent terms, that his detention was unjust, and might cause a war between Elba and Great Britain.—The colonel smiled, represented the inequality of the powers, but still obeyed his instructions. The day before the embarkation he received orders to disembark three or four thousand francs for making a road and had almost forgotten the embarkation, when, on the 8th of February, while he was working in his little garden, an aide de camp from the emperor directed him to embark all his men by 6 o'clock in the evening, and repair to the flotilla off Porto Ferrajo, at a given time the same night. It was so late, that he could not put his soldiers on board before half past 7, at which time he got into a boat and rowing to the station arrived the imperial brig the Inconstant, which was under sail. On mounting the deck, the emperor ascended him with "comment venez-tu? on est votre monde?" and, on receiving the answer, said no more. The colonel learned that the little garrison of Porto Ferrajo had not received orders to embark until one o'clock, the same day, and that the emperor, with Bertrand, Drouet, his staff, arrived at eight, when a single gun gave the signal, and they set sail. The flotilla consisted of the Inconstant of 26 guns, L'Étoile, and La Caroline, bombarded, and four feluccas. The soldiers on board the Inconstant were 400 of the old guard. The colonel knew not, and no one appeared to know, whether they were going by the guard, when drawn on the beach, had shouted, "Paris est mort!" as if by a presentiment of their destination. The wind blew from the south and at first farther strong, but subsided into a calm; so that by daylight they had made no more than 6 leagues, and were between Elba and Caprai, in sight of the English and French cruisers. The night, however, had not been totally lost, for during the darkness the soldiers and crew had been let over the sides of the brig, and had entirely changed her painting from the yellow and the grey to black and white, in order to escape the observation of those who were acquainted with the vessel.

It was proposed to return to Porto Ferrajo, but Napoleon ordered the flotilla to continue its route, determining in case of necessity to attack the French cruisers, two frigates and a brig, which, however, it was thought would join rather than oppose them. At twelve the same day the wind freshened, and the flotilla, at four o'clock was off the headland of Leghorn. Three men of war were in sight, and one of them a brig, bearing down on the Inconstant, the ports were taken up, & some preparations made for action. The guard, however, were ordered to take off their caps, and lie down on the deck, Napoleon intending to board the vessel only as a last resource, and in case the Inconstant should not be permitted to pass without a visit.

But the Zephyr, as she was called, only passed alongside the brig, and her captain, Andreux, being hailed by lieutenant Leghorn, Three men of war were in sight, and one of them a brig, bearing down on the Inconstant, the ports were taken up, & some preparations made for action. The guard, however, were ordered to take off their caps, and lie down on the deck, Napoleon intending to board the vessel only as a last resource, and in case the Inconstant should not be permitted to pass without a visit.

said, "In a case like this, one must think slowly, but act promptly. I have long weighed, and most maturely considered the project. The glory, the advantages we shall gain, if we succeed, I need not enlarge upon. If we fail—to military men, who have from their infancy faced death in so many shapes, the fate which awaits us is not terrific: we know, and we despise, for we have a thousand times faced the worst which a reverse could bring.

These were nearly the last words which he spoke before his little fleet came to anchor in the gulf of Juncus, and they were delivered with a more set phrase, as a sort of final address to the companions of his great enterprise.

By virtue of a decree of the Chancery Court, will be exposed to public sale, on the premises, at 11 o'clock, on Saturday the 30th of November inst. the reversion of Joshua C Higgins in and to all that part of two tracts or parcels of land called White Hall, and What You Will, which was devised for a term of years to the children of Jasper E. Tilly, by the last will and testament of Richard Higgins, deceased. This land is situate in Anns Arundel county, on the head of South River, adjoining the land of Mr. Joseph Evans.
