The Subscriber

From a long continuance of bad health, which renders him incapable of attending to business, respectfully offers to the public his stock of Dry Goods, at invoice prices, a large portion of them being purchased last summer. Any person desirous of buying the said stock, will meet with liberal encouragement. And from a wish to close his affairs, he assures the citizens, and others, that he will supply them at cost, and hopes, that on examination the goods will be found as cheap and as good as any brought to this market this fall.

He avails himself of this method of returning to his customers his grateful thanks for the very flattering encouragement he has experienced from them, and should he be enabled to resume business, hopes again to serve them with usual attention and liberality.

N.B. He respectfully solicits those who are indebted to him to make immediate payment.

B. Curran.
