THE SACRIFICERY norning's sun tose bright and elear:

On Abraham's tent it gaily abone.

And all was bright and cheerful there
All, save the Patriarch's liear alone

While Gop's command green to mind It forced into his eye the tear;
For though his soul was all resigned.
Yet nature fondly linger'd there.

The simple morning least was spread And Sarsh at the hanquet smild; Joy wer her face its lustre shed, For near her sat her only child.

The charms that pleas'd a monarch's eye, Upon her cheek had left their trace:

His highly augured destiny
Was written in his heavenly face. The groaning father turn'd away, And walked the inner test apart-

He felt his fortitude decay, While Nature whisper'd in his heart! O! must this son to whom was given The premise of a blessed land, Heir to the choicest gifts of Heaven,

Be slain by a fond parent's hand? This son, for whom my eldest born Was sent an outcast from his home And in some wilderness forlorn

A savage exile doom'd to roam?-But shall a feeble worm rebel, And muemur at a father's rod?

Shall be be backward to fulfil The known and certain will of God? Arise my son! the cruit fill,

And store the scrip with due supplies; . For we must seek Moriah's hill,

And offer there a sacrifice!" The mother rais'd a spraking eye, And all a mother's soul was there

"She fear'd the desert drear and dry! The fear'd the savage lurking there Abraham beheld, and made reply: "On Him, from whom our blessings flow, My sister, we with faith rely: Tis he commands and we must go!

The dateous son in haste obey'd.

The scrip was fill'd, the mules poe par'd;
And with the third day's twilight shade
Moriah's lofty hill appear'd.

The Menials then at distance wait-Alone ascend the son and sire ; The wood on l-sac's shoulder's laid, The wood___to build his funeral pyre!

No passions swayed the father's mind He felt a calm, a death like chill-His soul, all chastened, all resign'd Bow'd meekly-though he shudder ed still.

While on the mountain's brow they

A stood
With smiling wonder, Isaac cries, "My father, lo ! the fire and wood— But where's the lamb for sacrifice !"

The Holy Spirit stay'd his mind. While Abraham answered low, aside With steady voice, and look resign'd, God will himself a lamb provide!

But let no pen, profane like mine, On heliest themes, too rashly dare Turn to the Book or Books Diving. And read the blessed promise there.

AN APPEAL.

Yesterday, as a con as I entered my door, my little girl put a small piller into my hand, begging me to read it, and then give her Ninepence—

Ninepence! Why, what do you want with it? Read that papa, and you will know. That paper was sent by Mrs.— to-day, to Mr. Oswald's school. I read the cardinal follows:

as follows:
To all little girls and boys who may sometimes have a ninepence, and often more, to spend in gingerbread or sugar candy.

"A poor woman, destitute of every comfort, solicits your charry, She has four small children, who, with herself, have neither clothes to keep them warm nor bread to ear; her house without a chimney, and hed without blankers; in this cituation I visited har this marning, and no fire but what was made from in little brush; dragged to she hause by two shildren Now is it not better to give your money to this poor you can so wall ho without ?"

you can so well to without?"

As goon as I had read it, my little girl held out her hand for it.

"No, child, this must go into to morrow's Compiler."

Her eyes watered—"Bur, papa, I have gro-mined to earry it best, to-morrow mirraing." Trues but I hope I can do some good to the poor woman by putting it into the Compiler-besides you can have it again."

I nated after this wretched female—I found she was really what she had been painted by the pencil of sympathisting sensibility—able scaninded poor and wretched almost beyond description. But read the eard again! Read the simple touchcard again! Read the simple touches of eloquence, drawn by a most imrable female, and intended to melt the hearts of the little children Is touched my heart, and if I am not mistaken in the women of Richmond, it will met theirs. It was meant for children but the voice of unture will reach the heart of the good of all ages. It is the draft of humanity, and no good person can protest it. To you herefore matrons and maids of Richmond, I address the simple tale, If you have hearts worthy of being blessed with the prosperity you enjoy, you will seek this

Instruct thyself to feel, as wretches

That thou mayst shake thy superflux among them And make the heavens more just.

Thinkady who penned the above pathetic appeal, designed it only for children, nor is she at this moment aware of my intention to lay it before the public.

But if any one wishes to know the name and address of the dis tressed semale, let them call at this office-They may then see & judge for themselves.
