SUSPENDED ANIMATION. It is advisable that every family should be provided with a copy of what experience has shown to be the readiest and most certain means of recovering persons from apparent death: for that purpose we republish the following extract from the London Philanthropist. N. Y. Herald. Apparent death from Drowning. 1. Untie the neckcloth, & strip off the clothes immediately, wipe the body and cover it in cold or damp weather with a blanket or any woollen garment, or the clothes of some person present, and convey it carefully and expeditiously with as little agitation as possible to the nearest house—it may be carried either in men's arms, or upon a door or hurdle, with the head raised and the body inclined to the right side; should the house be at a distance, a cart, if it can be procured, will be the best method of conveyance. 2. Lay the body (the head still raised) on a bed or mattress, or on a low table covered with folded blankets, in winter at some distance from the fire, in summer near the window, and if possible in the sun, taking especial care that not more than six people be allowed to remain in the room at any one time, as a greater number might prevent the return of life; these six may be divided into two sets, one set being active in restoring the warmth of the body, whilst the other is employed in recovering the breathing. 3. Close the mouth and one nostril, whilst another person blows into the other nostril by means of a pair of bellows, or his breath if bellows be not at hand, with sufficient force to fill the lungs with air; which being done, the person who has the charge of the mouth and nostrils, should suffer a small quantity of air to pass through them at least every minute, by taking the hand off from those parts and placing it on the chest, which should be pressed gently for a few seconds so as to expel the air; thus the natural breathing will be imitated—After the lungs have been thus carefully filled and emptied two or three times, (and not before) rub well the whole body, particularly the right breast, the hand being softened occasionally with oil or hog's lard, either of which is better than the flour of mustard, salt, or spirits, which are highly injurious. 4. This plan of filling and emptying the lungs should be regularly continued if necessary for four hours, during which time let a third person apply to the feet and hands bladders or bottles of hot water, or warm tiles wrapped in flannel, moving lightly up and down the back every now and then a warming pan, covered with flannel or some garment; and when signs of returning life appear, put into the mouth a table-spoonfull of warm wine and water, or warm brandy, rum, or gin and water, and give the same quantity every five or ten minutes till one or two gills be consumed; after which, the senses and breathing being tolerably restored, put the person into a warm bed and suffer him without disturbance to fall asleep. Should the person be incapable of swallowing, the liquor should be passed into the stomach with the elastic tube and syringe, which are to be found in either of the society's chests. 5. It is to be observed, that as soon as the pulse at the wrist or ankle, or beating of the heart, can be felt, the inside of the nostrils ought to be touched occasionally with a feather dipped in spirits of hartshorn or strong mustard: It being found by experience, that any irritation applied to the nose has considerable influence in exciting the action of the muscles concerned in breathing. The above directions, (comprised in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5.) assiduously followed, will be found sometimes sufficient for the recovery of the drowned; it is, however, strongly recommended, when gentlemen of the Faculty can be obtained, that their assistance should be requested with all possible speed, as their skill will lead them judiciously to vary this mode of treatment, which is indispensably requisite on some occasions, particularly in apparent death from hanging, intoxication, &c. as noticed in the following pages.

Apparent death from hanging. 1. The same measures should be pursued which are recommended for drowned persons; but the restoration of life will be facilitated considerably by opening a jugular vein, or by applying cupping-glasses to the neck. 2. The quantity of blood should seldom exceed an ordinary tea-cup full, which will generally be found sufficient to unloose the vessels of the head. Insensibility or apparent death from drunkenness. 1. If the countenance continue swelled and of a dark red or purple hue, after placing the body in an upright position for five minutes, blood should be taken from a jugular vein or temporal artery, or from the neck, by the application of cupping-glasses. 2. The pulse and breathing being perceptible, and the body warmer than natural, cloths dipped in cold water, and applied to the head and neck, have been found very serviceable, in restoring intoxicated persons to their senses, without the aid of bleeding. 3. An emetic may be early administered with great advantage, & a disposition to vomiting is to be encouraged by draughts of warm water, which should be introduced by the flexible tube and syringe, when the person is incapable of swallowing. 4. The emetic failing in its operation, a clyster may be injected every quarter of an hour if necessary. 5. The application of leeches to the temples will sometimes prove very useful, and blisters to the inside of the legs and between the shoulders may be advantageously applied. 6. Vinegar and water, brisk cyder or perry diluted with water, or two or three tea-spoons full of the elixir of vitriol in a pint of water, frequently afford great relief. 7. The body being cold, equal parts of spirit of hartshorn and salad or common oil, or equal parts of rum, gin or brandy and oil well shaken together, is an excellent application for the wrists, ancles, temples and chest, on which it should be well rubbed for a considerable length of time. 8. If these means should not succeed, no time is to be lost in trying the method advised for drowned persons.

Apparent death from Lightning. Persons deprived of sense and motion by lightning, and not recovering in the space of a few seconds, have been too often supposed irrecoverably dead, although no marks of violence appeared on the body. Such conclusions are to be most cautiously avoided, as experience has repeatedly shown, in the complete recovery of many persons, who, besides the loss of sense and motion, had been severely injured externally. 1. The person should be removed into the open air, with the head raised, and the body inclined to the right side. 2. Cold water in small quantities thrown forcibly and repeatedly on the face and breast, and the body well rubbed at intervals with flannel cloths, have been attended with much benefit. 3. If the body feel cold, gradual warmth should be applied as well as the means recommended for the drowned: but of all remedies in restoring the energy of the brain in cases of apparent death from lightning, electricity is the most effectual, having this advantage, that it pervades the inmost recesses of the frame. On which account, let an electrifying machine be procured as speedily as possible, the other means being in the interval constantly employed. Persons frost-bitten, or apparent death from intense cold. 1. The head being slightly raised, rub the body generally with ice, snow or cold water. 2. Restore warmth by slow degrees, taking especial care not to place the person before the fire, or near it. 3. Should no appearance of life be observed after these means have been assiduously tried for a quarter of an hour, have recourse to the means pointed out for the recovery of the drowned.
