Br Sinan Potsun, well or Onogrit. My heart is like the mountain oak That woos the sun but mocks the blast

Till shivered by the lightning's stroke 'Its strength is gone, its verdure cast; And when in dust 'tis lowly laid,
The meanest reptile soils its head, And nought beweils the ruined tree-But what were tears to it or me?

My life is like the meteor bright That darts along the midnight air: Swift, transient, dazzling in its flight, Heedless of clouds that threaten there:

Twas seen-but where it rose or wen No tongue may tell nor pencil paint; None grieve so brief its date should be-But what were grief to it or me?

My life is like the gaudy fly That flutters in the morning beam, But, ere the rose breathed zephyrs sigh Perhaps floats lifeless down the stream; Yet for the insect's early doom No eye is wet, no brow in gloom— But, after death, why should there be A heart to mourn for it or me?
