'There are people,' continued the corporal, 'who can't even breathe without slandering a neighbour.' You judge too severely,' replied my aunt Prudy; 'very few are slandered who do not deserve it.' 'That may be,' retorted the corporal; 'but I hear very slight things said of you.' The face of my aunt kindled with anger-'Me!' exclaimed she; 'Me! slight things of me? what can any body say of me?' 'They say,' answered the corporal, that-that you are no better than you should be.' Fury flashed from the eyes of my aunt. 'Who are the wretches?'-·I hope they slander no one that does not deserve it!' remarked the corporal jeeringly, as he left the room. The feelings of my aunt may well be conceived. She was sensibly injured. True, she had fretful; but she was rigidly moral and virtuous. Conscious of the correctness of her conduct, she was wounded at the remark of the corporal. Why should her neighbours slander her? She could not conjecture. Let my aunt be consoled. She falls under the common lot of nature.
