From the Pittsburgh Gazette. Timothy Pickering.

It is pleasing to observe how much party asperity has been softened within a few years-it is still more p easing that certain papers havenub. ished their recantation during the life-time of one of the patriots who, of all others, has been subjected to more vile invective than any other. We allude to the modern Aristides, Timothy Pickering. Times must have been corrupt indeed when such man could have been made the subject of susp cion or abuse, 'The National Intelligencer' contai s the following article some months back.

Where truth points the way I shall not fear to follow."—Timothy Pickering.

"This declaration made by a venerable patriot, to whom the highest powers of eloquence have paid a just and appropriate tribute of applause in the hall of Congress, should be the motto of every friend to his country," &c.

The most distinguished leaders of the party, that framed the federal constitution and strenuously lahoured to procure its adoption, were for a long time covered with obloquy; but time has dispelled the mists of calumny, and all now confess them to have been able and disinte. rested statesmen. Washington & Hamilton, and Jay and Pickering, were stigmatised as British partizans and enemies to their country, at the same time they were devoting their anxious days and nights to the planning of those wise measures which, time has proved, are the foundation of our national prospe-

Hamilton, Jay and Pickering, prohably could have obtained wealth & power, if they could have stooped to have been false to, themselves, treacherous to their friends, and flarterers of the populace. If they could have degraded themselves by slandering their competitors, and using the base arts of demagogues, they might for a time receive the homage of the weak and superficial, who fancy that the prosperity of the wicked is the fulness of bliss.

How diferent are the emotions of the heart of all towards the benefactors of their country who heeded not the popular prejud ce of the hour, and towards these men of low and sordid ambition who would stab virtue, and blur the glory of their country, to obtain the pride of place, and the lucre of office!

EXTRAORDINARY SEASON.

In some respects, the past season may be considered as having been very singular in various parts of this and of other countries. Among the extraordinary circumstances of the season, is that of double crops of fruit. To the statements we have already published on this subject, we add the following from the Charleston Patriot of the 22d inst: From a single Pear Tree were ga thered, in August last, in this city upwards of 300 Pears, one of which weighed one pound seven ounces, & measured thirteen and an halfinches in circumference. Nearly the whole of the number were but little short, we have been told, of this size.
