highly interesting and valuable. The documents it will contain, most of which are of great interest, as containing many curious facts, which have probably never been developed, and also the views and feelings of their distinguished authors, during those days of peril and alarm.

It may well be said of Paul Jones, that he was the father of our naval glory. And who is there, that does not desire to become familiar with the life of the first American Commander, who dared to grapple ship to ship with Albion—who in fact entered the Thames, and assailed the Lion in his den?

Blasphemy.—Amidst all the vices and all the enormities of Algerine Turks (a people distinguished for violence and rapacity, and almost every species of cruelty) some good qualities are observable.

When will this be said even of men who glory in their superior light of information?

So tenacious, indeed, are the Turks on this subject, that it is said if one of them, in his walks, is likely to tread upon a piece of written or printed paper, laying on the ground before him, he will invariably turn aside, least it should have the name of GOD upon it.

PAUL JONES.

From the New-York Commercial Advertiser.

It is a matter of some surprise, in this age of book making, that the world has never been presented with an accurate & authentic account of the life & exploits of this eccentric and chivalrous officer.

An opportunity is now presented to the American public, to avail themselves of a full, authentic, and probably excellent history of the life and transactions of this brave and extraordinary man.
