Mr. Denman said, he was at a loss to know how to address the house, since the orders of the house, so much differed from the instructions he had received from his Royal Client. Upon the question of it, however, he could have no difficulty in stating, that the wish of her majesty was, that this proceeding should be brought to a speedy and complete termination. She therefore desired that, within these twenty four hours, she may be enabled to meet her accusers, whoever they may be. It was impossible, he apprehended, that the Secret Committee could have come to its report without evidence before them; and, therefore, it could not be difficult immediately to produce those witnesses; and for the accuser to proceed to prove his charges. He trusted he was not guilty of disrespect when he said that he found in all their Lordship's proceedings against the Queen no analogy to those of Courts of Justice, but nevertheless that illustrious Lady called on the house to suffer her to meet her accusers. They were told by the bill, that with which she was charged had been continued for six years—why then were not these charges made before? In ordinary cases of divorce it was customary to inquire what had been the moral conduct of the husband—and even if that had been correct, there might be an abandonment on his part, which would deprive him of the remedy he sought for. She, however, waived all claim to such inquiry, in order to see at once at the bar all that her accusers could bring as witnesses against her. The names of all the evidence in every criminal case were endorsed on the back of the bill presented to the Grand Jury—they were examined on oath in open Court—and was her Majesty to be the only person in the land who was denied that right and justice? All former cases of this kind had been attempted to be justified on grounds of state necessity—but if that had been the case in the present instance, would it have been allowed to sleep over six years?—There was no spurious issue or probability of any charge to make it a matter of state necessity in this case. Her humble and distinct application is, that all the evidence in the Green Bag should be communicated to herself and the public—for she was convinced that the more they were sifted the more false they would be shown to be. He intreated that her Majesty should as in the lowest Courts of all, have in that, [the highest] the power of vindicating her conduct at the bar of that house, by overwhelming the witnesses against her—and by shewing that all the duties of man and wife had been violated, and with respect to her. It had been said that this was but a bill of divorce, and not of pains and penalties; but he knew of no heavier pain, no severer penalty, than to be hurled from the highest rank in life to a pit of infamy; and that too by the Report of a Secret Tribunal.

The Earl of Liverpool said, the question was put by the Learned Counsel, whether they would proceed to the second reading immediately, or to put it off for the ends of substantial justice. He could assure the house that no unnecessary delay should take place in the progress of the Bills; but on Monday next, he should fix the day for the second reading. He therefore moved,

NOTICE. The Vestry of the Free School of Anne Arundel county, hereby make known, that an election of a teacher will be made, at the school house, on the first Saturday in October next, and on the same day annually thereafter; and that the school is to be considered vacant on that day in every year, free for any person who may think proper to apply for the same. They therefore request all persons who may wish to take charge of this institution, to make application in writing to Breda J. Worthington, esq. President of the Board, on or before the said first Saturday in October annually, or personally to the board on the day of election, producing satisfactory testimonials of qualification and moral character. This establishment consists of one hundred and eighty acres of good land, a school house in good repair, and a comfortable dwelling house, large enough for the accommodation of a family. Its location is in a very populous neighbourhood, and to a man capable of teaching the English language in all its branches, together with Latin and Greek, the visitors have no hesitation in believing it would be highly profitable. Possession given the first of January 1820.
