Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, Utter'd or inexpress'd; The motion of a hidden fire, That trembles in the breast.

Prayer is the borden of a sigh, The falling of a tear;
The upward glancing of an evel
When none b. t. God is near.

Prayer is the simplest form of speech,

The infant lips can try; Praver is the sublimest strains that reach The majorty on high.

Prayer is the Christian's vital breath, The Christian's native air; His witchword at the gates of death— He enters Heaven with prayer.

Prayer is the contrite sinner's voice, Ret rning from his ways; While Angels in their song rejoice,

And cry, behold he prays. In prayer on earth the saints are one, In word, in deed in mind, When with the Father and the Son, Sweet fellowship they find.

Nor prayer is made on earth alone,
The Holy Spirit pleads,
And Jesus on the eternal throne,
For sinners intercedes.

O thou by whom we come to Ged,
The life, the trath, the way;
The path or prayer thyself has trod,
Lord, teach us how to play.

The following singular anecdote is stated in Southey's life of John Wesley, the celebrated Methodist: "While Charles Wesley was at Westminster, under his brother John. a gentleman of large fortune in Ire land, and of the same family name. wrote to the father, and ingefred of him of he had a son name Charles, for if so, he would make him his heir; according'y his school bills, during several years, were discharged by his unseen name sake. At length a gentleman, who is supposed to have] been this Mr. Wesley, called upon him, and after much conversation, asked if he was . leggto accompa ny him to Ireland -T e you'h desired to write to his father beine he could make answer; the father left it to his own decision, and he, who was satisfied with the fair prospects which Christ Church opened to him, chose to stay in England .-John Wesley, in his account of his brother, calls this a fair escapethe fact is more r. markable than he is aware of-for the person who inherited the property intended for Charles W. sley, and who took the name of Wesley, for Wellesly, in consequence, was the first earl of Mornington, grand-father of marquis Wellesty and the duke of Wellington. Had Charles made a different choice, there might have been no Methodists, the British empire in India might still have been menaced from Seringapatam, and the undisputed tyrant of Posrope might at this time have insu-ted and endangered us on our own shores."

EXTRACT.

No party men .- Some very vain and some weak men, and some very great hypocrites, pretend to be of no party: while they arrogate to themselv s, a discernment, superior to both parties; they affect to be nou tral and undecided between them. They claim the title of the truest patriots, and to love their country with the ardour of passion, yet they inconsistently condemn the violence of both parties, and expect to have both believe that the fire of their zest subsists pure and unexpended in the frost of moderation. Such men are often flattered as federa lists, more often used as democrats, but always held in a contempt that is never more hearty than when it is discreetly suppressed:"-[Ames.
