THE SEAMAN'S BIBLE.

Borne on the bosom of the wave,
Where death and danger oft appear,
The Seaman trod the billowy grave,
Stranger to thought and fear.

Unknown the power that stayed his youth,
The god who holds the sea, unknown
Within, no ray of living truth,
With kindly impulse shone.

Fierce, the careering midnight storm
In anger, mingled wave with sky,
While the red lightning scathed his form,
His curse was heard on high.

Deep thunders rent the shivering mast,
The barque rode tossed by every sea;
No tear was given for the past,
Nor to futurity.

No prayer assailed the holy throne,
Could the protean seer's scroller pray;
Not wretched, trembling and alone,
His spirit fled away.

Mourn Seaman! for thy comrade mourn,
His soul was noble, generous, free,
Yet deep in guilt, it sought the bourne
Of dread eternity.

O had he scanned the living chart
By which the unerring course is laid,
Renewed, and sanctified in heart,
The wanderer ne'er had strayed.

Mourn for the dead—yet with thy tears
Blend earnest thanks for grace divine,
Seaman! a happier dawn appears,
The Bible now is thine!

The "Man of Nazareth" calls to thee,
He bids thy toils, and sorrows cease;
The voice that calm'd proud Ganilee,
Speaks to the weary, peace.

He will direct and cheer thy way,
Mid perils, and through times afar;
And when by sin he's led astray,
Will shine thy Morning Star.

Safe in the tempest as the calm,
Is he who seeks the mercy seat;
Seaman, rejoice! Death boasts a charm
Leading to Jesus' feet.

From the Eastern Argus.

THE INFANT AND THE ROSE.

I saw a blushing vernal rose
In all its new-blown charms array'd,
And, in the arms of soft repose,
Beneath that flower an infant laid.

I gaz'd on each with wild delight,
For both were lovely to the sight.

I look'd again—and autumn's blast
Had stript that rose of all its charms;
And death with withering power had
Past.

And clasp'd the babe in icy arms,
Now where the leafless rosebush sighs
Low in its grave that infant lies.

How nature's cruel law, I cried,
Cuts short the hour of berried reign!
But nature's cheering voice replied,
They both shall live and bloom again;

The one in spring shall grace the grove,
And one shall smile in courts above.

TRIAL.

the claims to the services of Moses, a black man, and to hold him to involuntary servitude for life, together with a relation of the most remarkable events, that transpired on that occasion, in this place.

A black man named Moses, in the month of November, 1820, having abandoned the service of Abraham Fields, near Louisville, Ky., he over the Ohio to reside in this state. On the 1st of February, 1821, Moses was seized by order of the court, claiming him as a fugitive from labour, in other words as his property; and according to the laws of the United States, in such cases made and provided, brought before David S. Bassett, Esq., Justice of the peace—a motion was made in behalf of Moses by Messrs. Fitch and Elderkin, his counsel, for the postponement of the trial to the 8th February on the ground of procuring evidence to prove Moses' right to freedom.

The motion was resisted by Messrs. May and Thomasson, counsel for the plaintiff, alleging the cause before the court was in the nature of a partie tria. The justice however, on bail being given for appearance, allowed the motion, and the case stood adjourned accordingly, on the 8th February the parties appeared with their respective counsels, except that Mr. Ferguson supported the place of Mr. Deany. Claim to prove right to service gave evidence of the sale of Moses, an execution issued on a judgment rendered in Kentucky against the old master of Moses, more than 12 years past. It also appeared that Moses had been generally acknowledged a slave to claimant while employed. On these grounds the contended that Moses still was a slave to claimant. On the 8th day of December next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 5th day of February, 1821.
