A LETTER TO A FRIEND ON THE
"Abstract of Unitarian Belief."

Feb. I.

Anne-Arundel County Court.

On application to me, the subscriber, chief judge of the third judicial district of the state of Maryland, a petition, in writing, of James Murdoch, of Anne-Arundel county, stating that he is in actual confinement and praying the benefit of the act of the general assembly of Maryland, entitled, "An act for the relief of sundry insolvent debtors," passed at November session 1815, & the several supplements thereto on the terms therein prescribed, schedule of his property and a list of his creditors, on oath, as far as he can ascertain them, being annexed to his petition; and the said James Murdoch having satisfied me by competent testimony that he has resided two years in the state of Maryland, immediately preceding the time of his application, I do therefore hereby order and judge that the said James Murdoch be discharged from his confinement, so that he give notice to his creditors, causing a copy of this order to be inserted in one of the public newspapers printed in the city of Annapolis, for a week for three months before the third Monday of April next, to appear before the said county court at the court house of said county, on the third Monday of April next, for the purpose of recommending a trustee for his benefit, and to show cause, if any he have, why the said James Murdoch should not have the benefit of the acts, as prayed. Given under my hand this 29th day of September, 1820.

sic, entitled "A Collection of Unpublished Letters of Joseph II."

"General — I desire you to arrest Count K — and Captain W — immediately. The Count is an impudent character, proud of his birth, and full of false ideas of honour. Captain W. who is an old soldier, thinks of settling everything by the sword or the pistol.— He has done wrong to accept a challenge from the young Count. I will not suffer the practice of duelling in my army; and I despise the arguments of those who seek to justify it. I have a high esteem for officers who expose themselves courageously to the enemy, and who, on all occasions, show themselves intrepid, valiant, and determined in attack as well as in defence. The indifference with which they face death is honourable to themselves and useful to their country; but there are men ready to sacrifice every thing to a spirit of revenge and hatred. I despise them; such men, in my opinion, are worse than the Roman gladiators. Let a council of war be summoned to try these two officers with all the impartiality which I demand from every judge; and let the most culpable of the two be made an example, by the rigor of the law. I am resolved that this barbarous custom, which is worthy of the age of Famerlane and Bajazet, and which is so often fatal to the peace of families shall be punished and suppressed, though it should cost me half my officers.— There will be still left men who can unite bravery with the duties of faithful subjects.— I wish for none who do not respect the laws of the country.— Vienna, August, 1774."

The following are the particulars of the burning and destruction of the British ship KATE, of London, furnished to Capt. Jones, of the brig Diligence, from Guadalupe:

The crew (eight in number) of the ship KATE, Captain George Purdy, landed about 4 miles to windward of the Mole on the 24th of January, about 5 o'clock P.M.— They slept on the beach that night and next morning, a planter in the neighbourhood came to them and brought them to his house. A brother of said planter went to inform the Commandant of the event.

Their story was agreed on oath between the crew, and they all said "They belonged to the American ship Retriever, Captain Jacob Haws, belonging to Messrs. Siydane and Wyclof, merchants, of New-York; that after six weeks boisterous weather, not being able to keep the ship free, she being very leaky, the Captain had given orders to get the boat in readiness, and that they were so doing, and getting into the boat about 10 o'clock at night, when the Captain's son, about 10 years old, fell overboard in trying to get into the boat, and that the Captain threw himself into the sea to try to save him, but they both perished, and the ship went down; that after being two days and a night in the boat, they reached the beach near the Mole, with great hazard of their lives."

The Commandant sent militia dragoons to escort them to the Mole. They had a breakfast at the plantation, for which Thomas Murdoch, calling himself Mate, paid $1 a head. At the Mole they were kindly treated—the Mate put up at the tavern, and the rest in the jail. They stopped there six days; after which, five came to the town of Point Petre, escorted by an unarmed man. They arrived about five o'clock P.M. at the Point, and the Police and King's Attorney assisted them to get lodgings for that night.— Next day they were interrogated by the Judge and Interpreter, in presence of the King's Attorney; but they persisted in the same story. A few days after, three others were brought from the Mole, and interrogated in the same manner, one of whom turned state's evidence, and declared, apparently, the truth. Next day, a French lad, 15 years old, who had told the first story and did not know the truth had been revealed, sent word to the King's Attorney that he had a wish to speak to him. He was brought before the Court, and the lad told the real story also. He, with two others, came from the Mole in three different vessels, at the same time, directed to the King's Attorney.— They had with them all their baggage, and a good many dollars in their bags.

A Bible was found in their baggage, which the Mate said was given him in New-York, by a fellow lodger, about 11 months ago. There was printed, as a seal, in an oval form, the following words:—"Presented by the Merchants' Samaritan Auxiliary Society of the Bible, to the ship Kate, of London," dated, "Gravesend, May 11, 1818." And inside of the binding was written, in large letters, "Snip Kate."

Now, the judge availed himself of this circumstance to interrogate Thomas Murdoch and the rest a second time. His honour tells the sworn interpreter to say to Murdoch and the others as they are called in separately—"There is the Bible belonging to the ship Kate of London, capt. George Purdy, and upon that very same bible you swear to tell the truth, and nothing but the truth." Murdoch is very much embarrassed, says, in broken words, that he is not accustomed to swear on the bible, and resists some time; when the judge observes to him, that he is going to mention his refusal in the interrogatory; that yesterday he took an oath without difficulty to tell his story, and that in the New-York Custom House he would take several oaths, as customary. The judge added, that if he would not answer to the questions he should put to him, he would pronounce him guilty immediately, or refuse answering the questions of the court, was declaring him guilty. Murdoch then kissed the bible, and since I have taken an oath said he, on the bible, I will speak the truth; and he told the real story, which is in substance—that they belonged to the ship KATE, of London, capt. George Purdy, which ship had been chartered in August last at Halifax, by the house of Becher, Binney, & Co., for a voyage to Barbadoes, and back to Halifax—the ship took a cargo of fish, beef, and some lumber, consigned to the house of Robert Kite, of Barbadoes—they reached Barbadoes, where the cargo was sold for cash—the proceeds were put on board in two boxes, iron hooped, marked Nos. 1 and 2, containing $5,600—the ship sailed for Halifax in ballast—the mate had been discharged at Barbadoes, but after 24 hours, the winds against them, they tried for New-York, but without success—they were scattered hairs which remained on his temples railed in whiteness the driven snow; and, in the lines of his strongly marked countenance, the deepest melancholy was visibly depicted. He immediately arrested my attention, and I inquired with eager curiosity, who he was and what brought him there? Startled at the sound of my voice, the object which had excited my interest seemed to awake as from a reverie; he looked around him without much seeming speculation, and then began with slow and measured steps, to stride the Hall, where the more peaceable inmates of this gloomy mansion were permitted to take the air, repeating, in a low but audible voice, "once one is two, once one is two." Now and then he would stop, and remain with his arms contemplatively folded on his breast for some minutes, then, again resuming his walk he continued to repeat "once one is two; once one is two."

His story, as I received it from the Superior of the Hospital, is as follows: Conrad Lange, collector of the revenue in the city of Berlin, had long been known as a man whom nothing could divert from the paths of honesty; scrupulously exact in all his dealings, and assiduous in the discharge of his official duties, he had acquired the esteem and good-will of all who knew him, and the confidence of the Minister of Finance, whose duty it is to inspect the accounts of all officers connected with the revenue. On casting up his accounts, at the close of a particular year, he found a deficit of 10,000 ducats. Alarmed at this discovery, he went to the Minister, presented his accounts, and informed him that he did not know how it had arisen, and that he had been robbed by some person bent on his ruin. The Minister received his accounts, but, thinking it his duty to secure a person who might probably be a defaulter, he caused him to be arrested, and put his accounts into the hands of one of his secretaries for inspection, who returned them the day after, with the information that the deficiency arose from a miscalculation; that in multiplying, Mr. Lange had said once one is two, instead of once one is one. The poor man was immediately released from his confinement, his accounts returned, and the mistake pointed out. During his imprisonment, which lasted but two days, he had neither eaten, drunk nor taken any repose; and when he appeared his countenance was as pale as death. On receiving his ac-

Murdock says he buried in the yard of the tavern at the Mole, $450 but the money cannot be found.

Murdock has an American protégé, saying he was born in New Brunswick, state of New-Jersey and has papers from the Grand and private Lodges of New-York. The cook is a negro, of Philadelphia, from whence he went in a schir, to Halifax; his name is Philip Fisher, has an impediment in his speech. There is a French lad, a London boy, one Weichman, an Irishman, and two Scotchmen. It is supposed they will be sent to Barbadoes for trial.

A true Story.

There are perhaps no scenes which excite more commiseration or more sympathy than madness;

we inquire with peculiar interest into the causes which have deprived our fellow men of reason, that prerogative of humanity, that characteristic of his preeminence over the rest of the animal creation, that, which as-simplifies him, in some degree, to the first cause of his existence.

During my travels in the north of Europe, I visited, frequently, those receptacles of derangement which the charity of man has erected for his less fortunate brethren.

Actuated by curiosity I entered on the day the Hospital of Berlin, where

I beheld an object, the impression of which on my mind, six years have not been able to obliterate; often does this scene recur to my imagination, and I dwell on it wou'd be sad.

It was a man, whose exterior was very striking; his figure, tall and commanding, was inclined partly by age, but still more by sorrow; the few scattered hairs which remained on his temples railed in whiteness the driven snow; and, in the lines of his strongly marked countenance, the deepest melancholy was visibly depicted. He immediately arrested my attention, and I inquired with eager curiosity, who he was and what brought him there? Startled at the sound of my voice, the object which had excited my interest seemed to awake as from a reverie; he looked around him without much seeming speculation, and then began with slow and measured steps, to stride the Hall, where the more peaceable inmates of this gloomy mansion were permitted to take the air, repeating, in a low but audible voice, "once one is two, once one is two." Now and then he would stop, and remain with his arms contemplatively folded on his breast for some minutes, then, again resuming his walk he continued to repeat "once one is two; once one is two."

in the discharge of his official duties, he had acquired the esteem and good-will of all who knew him, and the confidence of the Minister of Finance, whose duty it is to inspect the accounts of all officers connected with the revenue.

On casting up his accounts, at the close of a particular year, he found a deficit of 10,000 ducats.

Alarmed at this discovery, he went to the Minister, presented his accounts, and informed him that he did not know how it had arisen, and that he had been robbed by some person bent on his ruin.

The Minister received his accounts, but, thinking it his duty to secure a person who might probably be a defaulter, he caused him to be arrested, and put his accounts into the hands of one of his secretaries for inspection, who returned them the day after, with the information that the deficiency arose from a miscalculation; that in multiplying, Mr. Lange had said once one is two, instead of once one is one.

The poor man was immediately released from his confinement, his accounts returned, and the mistake pointed out.

During his imprisonment, which lasted but two days, he had neither eaten, drunk nor taken any repose; and when he appeared his countenance was as pale as death.

On receiving his ac-

ounts, he was a long time silent, then, suddenly awaking as from a trance, he repeated "once one is two."

He appeared to be entirely insensible of his situation, would neither eat nor drink, unless solicited; and took notice of nothing that passed around him. Whilst repeating his accustomed phrase, if any one corrected him, by saying "once one is one," he was recalled for a moment, and said "no, right once one is one;" then, again resuming his walk, he continued to repeat "once one is two." He died shortly after leaving Berlin.
