The new Emperor, or Muly Azeit, had arrived at the outskirts of Tangier, with 1500 cavalry, and was to have entered on the 23d. The old Emperor was reported to be at Rabat, and it appears by all accounts, is in a fair way of losing his kingdom."

Manifesto of the Government of the Two Sicilies. Naples, Feb. 28. The Constitutional Government of the Two Sicilies, against which the Congress at Laybach has fulminated its anathemas, while it prepares to repel the most violent aggression of which history has ever made mention, desires also to appeal to the opinion of Europe & of all civilized nations; and that every one may equally judge on which side is reason, and on which side is injustice, in the war which after five years of peace, is going to break out in unhappy Italy, the government owes it to itself to make known all the particulars which have conducted it to the political situation in which it is at this moment placed.

The wants of the people of the Two Sicilies; the degree of civilization to which it has attained, had called for many years for a change in the internal system of the state. At the beginning of the month of July, 1820, the constitution of Spain was demanded by the unanimous voice of the nation. The king adhered to it, saving the modifications proposed by the representatives of the nation, who were convoked principally for this purpose, with the obligation to respect the basis of the new social compact.

Ever since the first moment, the spirit of moderation, and a scrupulous regard to the independence, the institutions, and the rights of other nations, have formed the rule of the conduct of the Neapolitan government. It proclaimed these maxims before the whole world, when it refused to interfere in the affairs of Benevento and Ponte Corvo, which had called for its interference. Europe cannot doubt of the sincere desire of this government to live in peace and good understanding with all others, if it examines without partiality the conduct observed towards Austria.

Nevertheless, the court of Vienna, constantly alleging that our political reform "shook the foundation of the social edifice; that it proclaimed anarchy as law; that it menaced the safety of thrones, and that of recognised institutions and the tranquillity of nations," urged with precipitation the most extraordinary preparations of war in the Italian states, increased the garrisons of Ferrara, Placentia, and Comacchio, and solicited all the powers of Europe to declare against the Neapolitan government, not to receive its ministers, and to break off all communication with it.

The prince regent, bound by the sacred oath to maintain the constitution, which is now the fundamental law of the monarchy, has sanctioned them. He has thought he should thus best fulfil the duties imposed upon him, as much towards the nation whose destinies are confided to him, as towards the king his august father, whose interest cannot be separated from that of his people.

Meantime, hostile to the social compact, which, by the beneficence of our king, forms the palladium of the monarchy of the Two Sicilies, the court of Vienna pretends to abolish it. Because a nation, regenerated to liberty and independence does not yield to its will, it has employed every means to make it believed that the interest of its policy is that of Europe, and has sworn utterly to overturn all our internal organization. Already its troops are advancing for this purpose towards the national frontiers; already the sword is stained with blood, and menaces Europe with a war, which has no parallel, directed against constitutional ideas, and the independence of nations.

In the interval, the sovereigns of Austria, Russia, and Prussia, met at Troppau, with their plenipotentiaries; and those of France and England. The object of this meeting was to take into consideration the affairs of Naples, and its result to invite his Majesty the King to repair to Laybach, to co-operate with the allied sovereigns on the means of conciliating the interests and happiness of his people, with the duties which they were called upon to fulfil towards their own states, and towards the world.

His majesty accepted a mission which was proposed to him in the name of a tutelary alliance; solely destined to guarantee the political independence of all states. The parliament consented to the departure of the sovereign; and thus refuting the calumnies spread respecting the state of constraint in which the King was supposed to be, it shewed the confidence which it placed in its august defender. He departed in fact, attended by the prayers of the nation; but scarcely had he arrived at Laybach, when he was deprived of the minister whom he had brought with him, and threatened with a disastrous war, to oblige him to adhere to the principles and violent measures already resolved at Troppau. All the means he employed to avert this misfortune were fruitless.

It was then that the allied powers, assembled at Laybach, took against the kingdom of the Two Sicilies resolutions, which, at the utmost, would be imposed, after a great number of victories, upon a vanquished and humbled nation. The envoy of Russia and Prussia, and the Charge d'Affaires of Austria, communicated them to his royal highness the Prince Regent on the 9th of this month, and declared to him that an Austrian army would advance to occupy the Neapolitan territory, unless the order of things established since the 6th of July be immediately abolished, and that, even if this spontaneous submission took place, the army would still penetrate into the kingdom to maintain the new order of things which it had intended to establish there.

It was then that his royal highness gave to the diplomatic agents those noble answers, which, after having excited their admiration and respect, produced in the parliament an enthusiasm which has communicated itself to the hearts of all the Neapolitans. Every body now knows that our magnanimous prince would not determine on any thing till he had consulted the deputies of the nation, to whom he communicated these proposals, that they might take such a resolution as was most suitable in the difficult situation in which the monarchy was placed; as to himself, faithful to his oaths, he protested that he would share the fate of the nation, from which he never could have separated himself.

The extraordinary parliament being then convoked, declared, in the memorable sitting of the 15th, that it was not able to consent to any of the proposals; that it considered his majesty's under restraint; that, during such a state of things, his royal highness the Duke of Calabria, should continue to exercise the regency; and, lastly, that all measures should be taken for the safety of the state.

Public opinion had already anticipated these determinations. The prince regent, bound by the sacred oath to maintain the constitution, which is now the fundamental law of the monarchy, has sanctioned them. He has thought he should thus best fulfil the duties imposed upon him, as much towards the nation whose destinies are confided to him, as towards the king his august father, whose interest cannot be separated from that of his people.

The total population of Indiana appears, from the late census, to amount to 147,600—in 1810, it was but 24,520—shewing an increase in ten years of 123,080.

It could not have been expected that these same armies which were sent to a short time ago, in the name of social order, to deliver Europe from oppression, would march against a nation which cannot be reproached with any infraction of the law of nations, and which, without exciting troubles among any of its neighbours—without offending legitimacy, and even professing the most respectful veneration for its sovereign and his august dynasty, is perseveringly engaged in ameliorating its internal administration. The powers of the second rank must see in what happens to the kingdom of Naples, the imminent danger which threatens them. On the day when our cause shall be raised, the independence, the liberty of Europe will share the same fate.

But a cause protected by justice and public opinion; a cause which interests all wise governments, and all nations who feel their dignity; a cause which will be defended by the whole nation, whose wishes have expressed themselves on this occasion with such unanimity; such a cause must triumph. Despair will combat against force; he who defends the constitutional laws and independence of the country; he who combats the foreigner who comes to rob him of the first, and to tread the second under foot, is not always the weakest.

The Neapolitan government, though it has provoked no one, though it has opposed the noble attitude of moderation to the multiplied outrages which have been lavished upon it by those who conspired its ruin, is now attacked by an Austrian army, which pretends to impose laws upon it. But, since neither Russian nor Prussian troops are marching towards our frontiers, it is only to the Austrian government we are obliged to oppose the resistance which our own defence requires. However, his royal highness flatters himself that the august monarchs assembled at Laybach, seeing the noble feeling which unites the inhabitants of the Two Sicilies, and their unanimous determination to defend the liberties and the honour of their nation, will renounce their prejudices, and will leave at peace a generous people, who desire only to enjoy the benefits of their new political system, under the protection of the constitutional and legitimate throne; a people who, during a period of seven months, have shown that noble attitude, and that respect to the King and to the royal family, which have made Europe judge them to be worthy of liberty; a people, in fine, who, taking no share in the affairs of other nations, have surely a right to expect that no one should interfere in their concerns.

His royal highness also flatters himself that all the other powers of Europe, not concerned in the present contest, will contribute, by their persuasion and good offices, to put an end to the disasters in which the scourge of war, ready to fall upon our country, threatens to involve humanity. If the fire is kindled in the south of the Italian Peninsula, who is there that must not fear the consequences! And who can say where its dreadful ravages will stop? If, unhappily, a war of extermination cannot be avoided, the Prince Regent and his august brother will place themselves at the head of the Neapolitan army, and will combat with it to the last extremity against the foreign invasion, invoking the aid of the Supreme Arbiter of empires, who protects innocence and right, and punishes abuses of force, injustice, and oppression!

A Letter dated Meadville, Pa. April 19, says: "we have a very backward spring, the snow fell at about ten inches deep on the 16th of this month, and weather continued cold."
