Incidents of the Earl of Pembroke

The falling of a late Earl of Pembroke, who had many good qualities, but always persisted inflexibly in his own opinion, which, as well as his conduct was often very singular, thought of an expedient to prevent the remonstrances and expostulations of those about him; this expedient was to feign himself deaf, and under pretence of hearing very imperfectly, he would always form his answer, not by what was really said to him, but by what he desired to have said. Among other servants was one who had lived with him from a child, and served him with great fidelity, and affection in several capacities, till at length he became his coachman. This man by degrees got a habit of drinking; for which his lady often desired that he might be dismissed, my Lord always answered, yes, indeed, John is an excellent servant. I say, replies the lady, that he's continually drunk, and I desire he may be turned off. Aye, says his Lordship, he has lived with me from a child, and as you say a trifling wages should not part us. John, however, one evening, as he was driving from K. Washington, overturned his lady in Hyde park; she was not much hurt, but when she came home, she began to rattle the Earl: Here, says she, is that beast John, so drunk that he can scarce stand, he has overturned the coach, and if he be not discharged may break our necks. Aye, says my Lord, is poor John sick?—Alas I am sorry for him. I am complaining, says my lady, that he is drunk, and has overturned me.—Aye, says my Lord, to be sure he has behaved very well, and shall have proper advice. My lady, finding it useless to remonstrate, went away in a pet; and my Lord having ordered John into his presence, addressed him very coolly in these terms: John you know that I have regard for you, and as long as you behave well, you shall always be taken care of in the family, my lady tells me you are taken very ill, and indeed I can see that you can hardly stand, go to bed, and I will see that you have proper advice. John being thus dismissed, was carried to bed, where by his Lordship's orders, who attended him in person, a large blister was put upon his head another between his shoulders, and sixteen ounces of blood were taken from his arm. John found himself the next morning in a woful condition, and was soon acquainted with the whole process, and the reasons upon which it had commenced.—John had no remedy but to submit, for he would rather have incurred as many more blisters than have lost his place. My Lord sent very formally twice a day to know how he did, and frequently congratulated my lady upon John's recovery, whom he directed to be fed only with water gruel, and to have no company but an old woman, whom he had ordered to attend him as a nurse. In about a week, John having constantly sent word that he was well, my Lord thought fit to understand the messenger, and said, he was exceeding glad to hear that the fever had quite left him, and desired to see him. When John came in, well John, says he, I hope this bout is over. Ah, my Lord, says John, I humbly ask your Lordship's pardon, and I promise never to commit the same fault again. Aye, aye, says my Lord you say right, nobody can prevent sickness, and if you should be sick again John, I shall see it, though perhaps you would not complain, and I promise you that you shall always have the same advice and the same attendance that you have had now. God bless your Lordship, says John, I hope there will no be need. So do I too, says my Lord, but as long as you do your duty to me, John, I will do mine to you, never fear. John withdrew, and so dreaded the discipline he had suffered, that he never was known to be drunk afterwards.

ANECDOTE

Showing the perfection of the French system of Police. A merchant of high respectability in Bordeaux, had occasion to visit the metropolis upon commercial business, carrying with him bills and money to a very large amount. On his arrival at the gates of Paris, a genteel looking man opened the door of his carriage, and addressed him in this manner:—Sir, I have been waiting upon you for some time; according to my notes you were to arrive at this hour, and your person, your carriage, and your portmanteau, exactly answering the description I hold in my hand, you will permit me to have the honour of con-

CASCA.—No. V.

The democrats are properly, divisible into four different orders, and may be classed Nov. first, second, third and fourth. The first most numerous, and consequently the least reprehensible.—They democrats by education.—also, non education. They are brought from the cradle, where this ungrate, turbulent and spurious political doctrine has long, locally prevailed.—into which section of country, or geographic lines of political demarcation, no ray of enlightenment has gleamed.—no solitary trace of sentimental independence has trespassed for many long years. Where their manual were bled, if ever they are to read, is the jacobinic, democratic journal of the day, (such as those which we are now literally inundated with, aided, perhaps, by a few tracts of similar character, written generally by his infallible mightiness, editor, or selected from his press columns. They believe, that the father, and uncle, and cousin, can do no wrong—begin, with their earliest lisping, to utter their pure sentiments, and arrive to maturity, ming politicians, without a single word on this, or any other subject, among these will be classed those, who, unaffected by those local errors, are democrats from ignorance. (since the term is used) non-education.—They form no inconsiderable number, and, when united with the other part of this class, constitute a great majority of all the masses. It is proper to observe, that, in addition to the causes mentioned, this formidable class are further continually drilled "kept up to the bit" by the eternal croakings and scoldings of the chiefs among them, called the best formed, or, in other words, the most ignorant. These last are the men for office of the highest kind—legislative, executive and judicial. This class are generally honest, and to the best of their knowledge and belief, right, in their opinion, and can as easily be prevailed on to change their lives, their fortune and sacred honour, for a Buonaparte, or a Ferdinand, as in any other cause. Only excite them, their demagogues preach a few political sermons, and ply them with the one thing needful, aided by talisman editor, and all is over; they rush to action without deliberation, and meet the consequences, however disastrous, not without conviction of success! Such are the first class; who, nevertheless, under wisdom and patriotism, may be made to fall into the ranks of rationality, in a moment, and, in all their physical strength, the attainment of any great purpose. They are, therefore, not only innocent, but, effectively useful; the chief dependants of the government are of this stamp. This, however, unfortunately, is not always the case; then they become the scourge of the land, for they can be directed to all and every purpose. The second class are composed of characters better informed in the first, yet not sufficiently intelligent to become eminent members, or in professional men, of any science—they are, therefore, greatly reduced in the original scale, from the first class, and not operated on by all means, or in the same manner, by or extraneous means, tying them to political blindness—this is a spurious and scattered situation through the country, sometimes and again out of office, for where they dare to think for themselves, which they sometimes make to do, (having some fear of their own,) they are immediately denounced by their enemies, and more ignorant men, to whom reasoning is a mystery itself, and by this means, the whole corps is acting, sans capitaine, and the fire from office and power, for a long time, perhaps, a considerable
