On coming upon the coast on Friday last, the Columbus met with a school of Mackerel, which followed the ship all day; in the course of which period they caught the unparralleled number, according to an estimate of 12,000 of that fish. There were near 300 lines used, and the people pulled in the fish as fast as they could throw their bait into the water. One of the lientenints counted 600 Mackarel which he caught with his own hands. The Columbus has brought out many rare plants-birds and animals-of the latter, two cattle of the celebrated white Tuscan breed are the most conspicuous.

It is gratifying to observe the activity and vigilance of the United States schr. Alligator, Lieut. Com. STOCKTON, in cruizing for Slave Traders on the coast of Africa. He has made so many captures, that he has been obliged to return to the United States for more men. A few such active cruizers from all nations, would coon exterminate this nefarious and inhuman traffic. Boston Intel.

We have thought the following account of him, which we copy from the manuscript journal of Mrs. Bingham, would be interesting to those whose attention is turned to the subject of the Mission to the Sandwich Islands. It shows that the inhabitants of those islands. possessing a productive soil and one of the finest climates on the globe, only need the benefits of civilization and the consolations of religion, to make them independent and happy. SINTRAM & HIS COMPANIONS [Translated from the German.] (Creditally · · CHAPTER 22.

The morning was considerably advanced, when Rolf, who had been slumbering, was awakened by a soft melody that greated his ear; he looked round, and observed with astonishment that it proceeded from the lips of the Castellan. The latter observed, by way of explanation, It is thus Wigand sings even now at the gates of the convent, 'as they open to him with friendly greeting." After this Rolf sunk again into sleeps uncertain whether what he had heard was a dream or reality.

But after a short while the glare of the sun woke him again; and as he raised himself up, he observed the countenance of the Castellan, that mpeared surrounded with a halo of rosy morning-rays, whilst his stern features were softened to a placid, almost infantine expression smildness. At the same time the till marrior inclined his ear to the silent air, as if listening to some most edifying conversation, or cheering-musick; and when he observed that Rolf intended to speak. he waved his hand, entreating for silence, and remained in his listening attitude. At last he sunk slowly and comfortable into his chair, muttering-God be praised! she has granted his last request; he shall have a grave in the cemetery of the convent; and now he has granted me his forgiveness from his innermost soul. Let me tell you Rolf, he finds a blessed quiet end."

Rolf dared not to move, nor ask a question, nor wake his master; it seemed to him, as if one, already departed this life, was speaking to

The Castellan remained silent for some time, while his smile increased in serenity; then he rose, listened again, and observed, "It is all over. The bells are ringing, We have conquered. How dear, how sweet, approaches the peace of heaven!"

And thus it was. He sun back exhausted, and his soul was freed from the body.

Rolf now waked the young knight and pointed to the smiling corpse; then they both knelt down and prayed to God for his soul. When they had risen from their devotion, they carried the cold remains of the shepherd into the vault, and awaited there the return of the chaplain. They knew the pilgrim would never return.

Towards noon the holy man returned. He only confirmed what they were already acquainted with. But he brought to Sintram a friendly greeting from his mother, and the news that Wigard had fallen into the sleep of death, while Verena, with reconciled friendliness, held the crucifix before his eyes. They prepared the last most peaceful bed for the Castellan, where they deposited him with all the usual sacred ceremonies. The chap lain soon after left them, but not before he had consoled Sintran with the assurance, that his dear mother knew how pious, mild, and good was his present life.

Sir Wm. Jones and Thomas Day, Esq.

One day upon removing some books at the chambers of the former, a large spider dropt upon the floor, upon which Sir William, with some warmth, said, "Kill-that spider, Day; kill that spider!" No, said Mr. Day, with that coolness for which he was so conspicuous— "I will not kill that spider, Jones; I do not know that I have a right to kill that spider! Suppose when you are going in your coach to Westminster Hall, a Superior Being, who perhaps, may have as much power over you, as you have over this insect, should say to his companion-"Kill that lawver! kill that lawyer!" How should you like that, lones? And I am sure to most people, a lawyer is a more noxious animal than a spider."

"THE HEART OF MID LOTHIAN." In the year 1736, two smugglers, of the names of Wilson and Robert-son, robbed the collector of customs at Kirkaldy of a considerable sum of money, which was the property of government. They were both taed to death. The fate of these men was universally pitied; but Wilson, by an act of extraordinary resolution, generosity and fidelity excited the general sympathy to ard int ad-initation, and fixed it solely on himself. The two criminals under sentence of death were, according to custom, carried on a Sunday after their condemnation, to join in the weekly public services of religion. -Four soldiers of the town guard of Edinburg were their conductors, and they entered the church before the congregation had fully assembled. and before the commencement of the service. The prisoners were entrusted without fetters to the custody of their guard. In these circumstances, the church door beng open, and the persons who were present not unfavourably disposed towards the criminals, Wilson, by a sudden effort of astonishing strength grasped with each of his hands one of the attending soldiers, seized a third with his teeth, held them inextricably fast, and called to his comrade Robertson to run for his life. Robertson did run, and made his escape.-Wilson, overjoyed in having delivered his friend, remained patiently behind to suffer for his
