

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY JONAS GREEN, CHURCH-STREET, ANNAPOLIS.

From the Commercial Advertiser of August 1. ICE-BERGS, ICE FIELDS, &c.

The following description of the Ice-bergs of the Polar Seas, of Ice-fields and S.O.es, and their formation, are extracted from Scoresby's Account of the Arctic Regions...

The following is an account of the Ice-bergs of Spitzbergen, and affords a very favourable specimen of the author's powers of description...

It is not easy to form an adequate conception of these truly wonderful productions of nature. Their magnitude, their beauty and the contrast they form with the gloomy tracks around, produce sensations of lively interest...

The well described one they are diameters and when combined will be seen a length of miles. composes fresh; a table of 10 to 15 feet high is often seen. The surface is often broken up by small pieces of snow and ice of various forms and sizes...

On an excursion to one of the Seven Icebergs, in July 1817, I was particularly fortunate in witnessing one of the grandest effects which these Polar glaciers ever present. A strong northwesterly swell having for some hours been beating on the shore, had loosened a number of fragments attached to the iceberg...

"On an excursion to one of the Seven Icebergs, in July 1817, I was particularly fortunate in witnessing one of the grandest effects which these Polar glaciers ever present.

The noise was equal to that of thunder, which it nearly resembled. The column which fell was nearly square, and in magnitude resembled a church. It broke into thousands of pieces...
