LIFE OF COM. MURRAY. From the Port Folio. **

Commodore Alexander Murray was born in Chestertown, Maryland, on the 12th day of July, 1755, of honest and respectable parents. From early life he was devoted to the watery element; and at the age of 18, commanded a vessel in the European trade. The revolution shortly after breaking out, zealously attached to the cause of his country, he forsook the mercantile life, and was appointed a lieutenant in the first Maryland regiment, commanded by Col. Smallwood. He had previous. ly received an appointment to the same station in the navy, but as we had no frigate then in service, he entered the army. He took an ear ly and conspicuous part in the hard fought battles that ensued at Whitelains, Flatbush, York, &c.

His sense of hearing was much impaired by the explosion and burst ing of sundry pieces of cannon, on the New York battery, while firing at the enemy's fleet, on their passage up the North river. This infirmity he faboured under until his death. At the close of this campaign he was severely afflicted by chronic complaints, and was compelled to retire, soon after having been appointed to the rank of capvain in the second regiment. At this time two hundred effective men only returned, out of nine hundred that marched from Annapolis; the rest having been either killed, or taken, or having fallen victims to the maladies of the camp. On the re-establishment of his health, captain Murray resumed his rank in the navy. As there were no public ships ready for service, he was appointed at various times, to command sundry letters of marque, repeatedly passing and repassing the enemy's fleet, and seldom escaping without a battle. One of these engagements is worthy of record:-Having been appointed to the command of the Revenge, a letter of marque, carrying 18 six pounders. with a complement of 50 men only, he sailed from Baltimore for Holland. He had the chief command of all the vessels then lying at that port, bound on foreign voyages, some of which were well armed. Meeting with the enemy's force much superior, he was compelled to return with his fleet, consisting of 40 vessels, and to seek reluge in the river Patuzent. The number afterwards increased to about 50 sail-the commanders of which all agreed to fight their way through the opposing fleet. With this determination they put to sea, when a fleet of privateers hove in sight. A signal was made for all the unarmed vessels to return, and for the remainder to rally round their commander. The ene my's fleet, consisting of one ship of 18 guns, one brig of 16 and three privateer schooners stood for the body of the fleet. One brig and one schooner only obeyed capt. Murray's signal to rally. He soon discovered himself lying between the ship and brig, when a severe engagement ensued. Captain Murray kept up an incessant fire from both broad sides, and in an hour's time had the satisfaction to see his enemies haul off, after having sustained much damage. The brig and the schooner likewise behaved extremely well, and repelled the assaults of their adversaries. Captain Murray after this action, returned to Hampton Roads to refit; his sails and rigging were much injured; but fortunately no lives were lost; few only were wounded, himself among the number. After captain Murray had repaired his vessel, he sailed for the banks of Newfoundland, and was unfortunately overtaken and surrounded by an English fleet of one hundred and fifty men of war and transports, bound to New York .-He was pursued and captured by a frigate. The captain and lieutenant were his intimate friends, from whom he received every kindness and attention. He at last arrived in Philadelphia, where he was regularly exchanged.
