There has been one great cause however, which has prevented this channel of trade from being improved and fostered, for it has notoriously been left to tally to provide for itself; since that time tally to provide for itself; since that time the facility of wagoning produce to market (principally to Philadelphia,) connected with the high price compared with the present time, which our productions have horne for more than twenty years, rendered the cheapness of a conveyance to marketof no greatimportance. But now when the cost of tanaport of a barrel of flour from the interior, is in some cases equal to one half, or even three fourths of its value at the sea port from which it is ultimately at the sea port from which it is ultimately ther to abandon the growth of the article or to seek out a cheaper mode of convey ance. The cheapest mode is undoubtedly by water, and where the circumstances seem to confine us to the improvement, at a small expense, of natural water courses, which will answer the purpose until a dense population and greater capital will justify the execution of a large and expensive work, your committee believe that every dictate sound wisdom points out that moderate

MOST MELANCHOLY.-It is or painful duty to record one of the most dispainted duty to record one of the most distressing incidents which has ever occurred in this vicinity. Early on Wednesday last, Mr. Harrison G. Blake an inhabitant of this town, left home with his wife and one of his children about 15 months old, intending to visit his father in law and other friends beyond the Green Mountain. They o'clock, and soon-after moon proceeded on the road leading over the mountain, thro' Sunderland. As they ascended they found the snow much deeper than they expected, and after two or three miles no sleigh had passed since the late snow, and no path or track was to be found. With much labour track was to be found. With much labour however, they slowly pressed forward, breaking their road through snow more than 2 cert drep, on the side-offs step, rugged mountain, and nearly theirs from any human habitation. Here high over took them. And to augment their dismay, their horse, fatigued by such protracted exertions in the snow, began to lag, and at length stopped. After some deliberation, they concluded to loose him from thesle gh, and made another vigorous effort to save themselves and their child. The following themselves and their child. The following extraction a letter, dated Stratton, Dec 2, written in Mr. Blake's name, by his attending physician to his friend here, exhibits all the additional particulars of this melancholy affair, which have come to our knowledge.
